Graduate Program

Master of Fine Arts

The Master of Fine Arts (M.F.A.) degree in Creative Writing and Writing for the Performing Arts (CWPA) offers writers the ability to move fluidly within various arenas of creative writing, including the genres of poetry, fiction, nonfiction, playwriting, and screenwriting, as well as in multimedia studies. The program integrates scholarly studies of narrative, style, voice, structure, and history of these writing disciplines with traditional workshop formats, forming writers who can actively direct the literature of the 21st century.

For students in the Main Campus

Traditional M.F.A. program, financial assistance may include teaching assistantships and fellowships, as well as fellowships for community projects through the Gluck Fellows Program of the Arts.

UCR Palm Desert Center (PDC)

An M.F.A. in Creative Writing and Writing for the Performing Arts is offered at UCR's Palm Desert Center, in the Low Residency program. Students in the Low Residency program can receive limited financial assistance through editorial positions on The Coachella Review, the student run literary journal of the program.

Palm Desert Low Residency Program

Students enroll in a prescribed number of units each term. Requirements are similar to the full-time program at UC Riverside, but courses are modified to fit low residency requirements. Low Residency MFA students come to Rancho Mirage, California for two ten-day sessions in the Fall and Spring quarters that include lectures, seminars, workshops and readings (please refer to website palmdesertmfa.ucr.edu for specific dates). Students also attend a final thesis or manuscript residency their last quarter to file. Students also enroll in a one unit Professional Development Course during this quarter. During the rest of the academic year, students participate in online workshops and seminars and work individually with faculty. Cross-enrollment between programs is not allowed. Full time enrollment in this program is 8 units per quarter for 7 quarters, and students pay a per unit fee.

Admission

Applicants to either program should demonstrate significant professional skill by submitting in thesis or manuscript form one of the following: 10-15 pages of poetry, a maximum of 25 pages of fiction or nonfiction, or the first act or a maximum of 25 pages of a screen play or play. Applicants must have a B.A. or B.S. degree from an accredited institution and submit 3 letters of recommendation, a self-statement, and original transcripts. Applications for the Main Campus Traditional Program are accepted for Fall quarter only; applications for the Palm Desert Low Residency program are accepted for the Fall and Spring quarters.

Plan I (Thesis or Manuscript) Both M.F.A. programs (Main Campus and PDGC Low Residency) require completion of a thesis or manuscript, the requirements of which are the same. Each student will decide which title - thesis or manuscript - best suits their work.

Main Campus Traditional Program

Consists of workshops in chosen genres, culminating in a final project (the master's thesis or manuscript) that showcases the writer's cultivated talents, in the form of a poetry collection, novel, memoir, screenplay, or full-length play. The M.F.A. requires students to major in one genre but encourages them to explore the other genres as well, allowing for creative movement within disciplines. Structure and focus in screenwriting and playwriting can also be applied to fiction and nonfiction, and lyricism and metaphor in poetry can also enhance description and dialogue in the other genres, for example. Students can also engage in course work in varied areas of directing and acting, in film history and literature, in literary criticism and translation, with supplemental courses selected from departments such as Comparative Literature and Foreign Languages, English, Hispanic Studies, and Media and Cultural Studies. Students can gain practical aspects of filmmaking from courses in Studio Art and Theatre.

Professional Development Requirement

By completing the required workshops in their chosen genre, as well as thesis research units in CWPA 299, students will fulfill professional development training by the end of their 6th quarter. Requisite courses include CWPA 230 for nonfiction concentration; CWPA 262 for fiction concentration; CWPA 270 for poetry concentration; CWPA 264, 266, 267, 268 or 269 for playwriting and screenwriting concentration.

Palm Desert Low Residency Program

Consists of workshops in chosen genres and course work culminating in a final project (the master's thesis or manuscript) which showcases the writer's cultivated talents, in the form of a poetry collection, novel, short story collection, essay collection, memoir, full-length work of nonfiction, screenplay, or full-length play. The M.F.A. requires students to write in two genres, allowing for creative movement within disciplines. Structure and focus in screenwriting and playwriting can also be applied to fiction and nonfiction, and lyricism and metaphor in poetry can also enhance description and dialogue in the other genres, for example. Students engage in course work in varied areas of directing and acting, in film history and literature, in literary criticism and translation. Requirements consist of 56 units of course work.

Course Requirements

1. Six low residency genre workshop courses.
2. Six low residency literature, poetry, and film seminars.
3. Six low residency cross genre workshops.

4. Thesis or manuscript. In the areas of playwriting and screenwriting, the final written project is a full-length play of two or three acts (90-120 pages) or screenplay or teleplay (approximately 120 pages). In the areas of poetry, fiction, and nonfiction, the final written project is a poetry collection (approximately 60 pages), novel, short story collection, essay collection, memoir or full-length nonfiction work (between 100-200 pages). Each student is paired with three faculty members who serve as the thesis advisor(s).

Major

The Dance major is distinctive for its outstanding faculty of nationally and internationally recognized artists and scholars who draw from a variety of creative and academic backgrounds, including dance making, choreography, visual art, creative writing, literature, African diasporic ritual cultures, Hip Hop and street dance, Latin Social dance, Indian diasporic dance, Korean dance, Hulu and Philippine folk dance, ballet and modern forms, Indigenous studies, digital technologies, performance studies, queer studies, and cultural studies.

The B.A. degree in Dance focuses on dance making and the cultivation of cultural and historical perspectives on dance. Movement practice, dance composition, performance, and critical dance studies courses are required. Elective courses are also required. Movement practice courses are offered in a variety of dance/movement forms. Dance majors choose an emphasis in Dance Making or Dance Studies. Majors have the option to participate in "UCR is Dancing," the department's annual concert series featuring original dance works and performance projects by students.

In addition, visiting professional dancers, choreographers, and scholars come to UCR frequently to give special workshops, master classes, and lectures.

Opportunities to perform include "UCR is Dancing," MFA students' final projects, and the Gluck Fellows Arts Outreach Touring programs.

Dance majors are eligible for the Marius de Brabant (formally Chancellor's Performance) Award, a scholarship of up to $3,000. Majors may apply for research grants and stipends for summer dance studies, as well as the Maxwell H. Gluck Fellowship, which awards $1000 in addition to pre-professional performance opportunities. Student assistantships and other forms of financial aid are also available.

Graduate Program

The Department of Dance offers a Master of Arts (M.A.) in Critical Dance Studies, a Master of Fine Arts (M.F.A.) in Experimental Choreography, and a Ph.D. in Critical Dance Studies.

Master's Degrees

M.A. in Critical Dance Studies

Admission

Students gaining admission to the Ph.D. program in Critical Dance Studies may, after advisement and with the approval of the faculty committee, elect to pursue an M.A. degree in Critical Dance Studies.

Plan I (Thesis)

Students must complete a minimum of 36 quarter units of undergraduate (100 series) and graduate (200 series) courses. At least 24 of these units must be in graduate courses and must include the following UCR courses:

DNCE 239 (Introduction to Graduate Study of Dance)

DNCE 254 (Political Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 255 (Historical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 257 (Rhetorical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 258 (Cultural Approaches to Dance Studies)

A maximum of 12 units of DNCE 299 (thesis research) can be counted towards the 36-unit minimum. Other courses (to fulfill the 36-unit requirement) should be selected, with the consent of the program graduate advisor, from relevant upper-division and graduate courses. The units must be taken for a letter grade and can include, but are not limited to: DNCE 200-level seminar courses (DNCE 239-244; 254-255; 257-258; 260 (E-Z); 264-265 (E-Z); 267); DNCE 280; an upper-division undergraduate-level course paired with 2 units of 292 (Concurrent Analysis).

Candidates for the degree must prepare and present an acceptable thesis to the Department of Dance.

M.F.A. in Experimental Choreography

offers emerging and established artists a site for intense investigation in dance making, performance, and interdisciplinary embodied practice. Over the course of six quarters, students engage in a series of core composition courses and select critical dance studies courses that focus on and address current and urgent questions in the field, and that center experimentation and interdisciplinarity in their approaches. Each quarter students pair with a faculty mentor, four quarters of which are for the Graduate Critique Panels (GCP), to engage intimately with their independent creative practices and show their work for critical feedback and progress evaluation. During the second year of the program students are required to share their work publicly as part of the MFA Fourth Quarter Showings (4QS), from which they begin to develop their final projects and form their committees. The final project demonstrates a thorough investigation and committed execution of a specific set of critical questions unique to their cumulative research, and includes a public artist talk and a written reflective/theoretical document.

UCR's M.F.A. program is unique for the close relationship it maintains with the Ph.D. in Critical Dance Studies, one of the preeminent programs for intellectual inquiry in the field of cultural, political, and historical studies of dance. Cooperation between these two programs, both conceptually and through intersecting curricula, contributes to the department's embrace of dance making and scholarship as complementary modes of investigation. M.F.A. students are equally enriched by the professional relationships they develop with our undergraduate population through teaching, directing, producing, and community engagement. Several venues on and off campus, including our Performance Lab, Studio Labs, and the Culver Center of the Arts downtown, are available for students to share their research.

Financial assistance includes teaching assistantships and fellowships for community projects through the Gluck Fellows Program of the Arts. Students are also eligible to apply for fellowship support from Graduate Division to help fund a portion of their second year of study.

Admission

The program is especially designed for established practicing artists who desire to return to university as a site for deeper engagement and reflection, individuals who demonstrate an invested creative practice and readiness to expand and challenge their established research.

Applicants to the program should demonstrate significant professional experience as an active dance, visual or performance artist making and producing work, and who desire to contextualize their aesthetic inquiry through the study of historical, cultural, and political perspectives.

Three digital samples of original creative work that exemplify the applicant's research and point of view of their embodied praxis, are required.

Applicants must have a B.A. or B.F.A. degree from an accredited institution.

Contact the department for specific details.

Course Work

Requirements consist of 40 units of course work (as set out below) and 12-14 units of independent research for a final project. Students' total number of units of graduate and upper-division undergraduate courses must equal at least 54. The core curriculum, normally to be completed in the first two years of residency, shall comprise the following 16 units:

DNCE 240 (Improvising Choreography: Scores, Structures, and Strategies)

DNCE 241 (Creating the Experiment: Identifying the New)

DNCE 242 (Dancing Representation: Figures, Forms, and Frames)

DNCE 243 (Collaborating in Dance Making: Materials, Methods, and Interactions)

Students must also take 4 units in each of the following:

DNCE 180R (Dance Practicum: Pedagogy)

DNCE 239 (Introduction to Graduate Study of Dance)

DNCE 244 (Special Topics in Dance Making)

In addition, students must complete 8 units from the following Critical Dance Studies courses:

DNCE 254 (Political Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 255 (Historical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 257 (Rhetorical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 258 (Cultural Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 260 (Special Topics in Critical Dance Studies)

DNCE 264 (Oral History and Ethnographic Methods)

DNCE 267 (Choreographies of Writing)

Students must also take Dance 301, (which does not count toward the total 54 units required for the degree) plus 4-6 graduate-level units of electives either within or outside the Dance Department. These units must be taken for a letter grade and can include, but are not limited to: any of the core PhD courses (DNCE 254, 255, 257 & 258) not previously taken; a Dance 200-level seminar course in critical dance studies (DNCE 260, 264 & 267); DNCE 280 (Colloquium); the bundling of an upper-division undergraduate-level course with 2 units of 292 (Concurrent Analysis).

An additional 12-14 units are taken through DNCE 297 or DNCE 299 for independent creative research work with faculty mentors on their Graduate Critique Panels, and on phases of the final project. During the second year, students form a committee consisting of three-four faculty members, one of whom may be outside the department. The committee approves the project proposal and supervises the final project.

Foreign Language Requirement None

Written and/or Oral Qualifying Examination

During the second year, the student writes a 10-15-page proposal for the final project to be approved by the committee.

Final Project

The final project may take shape in many forms in which the student's research is made evident. For example, students may 1) undertake to create site-specific performances occurring in different locales over several months, 2) organize opportunities for interactive choreography with distinct groups of performers, 3) develop a digital media or film project, or 4) create a portfolio of many distinct but connected projects. Whatever its final form, the project must demonstrate a thorough investigation and committed execution of a defined aesthetic concern. Students are also required to give a 30-minute public artist talk followed by Q&A, and produce a 20-40 page written document to be completed within one quarter of the performance/project event, which outlines the aesthetic focus of the student's research, reflects on the creative process, and provides a historical and philosophical contextualization for the project.

Normative Time to Degree 7 quarters

Doctoral Program

Ph.D. in Critical Dance Studies

The Ph.D. program in Critical Dance Studies provides an advanced interdisciplinary base for innovative research in the field of cultural, political, and historical studies of dance. The program of study embraces a theoretical consideration of all dimensions of the practice of dance. These dimensions include, but are not limited to, body politics; media and digital cultures; globalization and cultural translation; race, ethnicity, sexuality, and gender; mobilization and class; and corporeal knowledges and choreography. In addition to theoretical and historical concerns, the program promotes the articulation of a variety of methodological approaches to the analysis of bodily performance.

UCR faculty put into motion various modes of production: performance studies, history, ethnography, critical race theory, feminist studies/masculinities & queer studies, Marxism or post-Marxism, and other specific area studies related to, for example, South Asian, Asian Diaspora and Asian American studies, African Diaspora studies, Indigenous studies, Latina/Latin American studies, and Global South studies. The program provides a provocative environment for investigating cutting-edge strategies for original scholarly work in dance.

Admission

Students must meet the general requirements for admission to the Graduate Division as shown in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. Students may submit a statement of background about experience in dance history and theory, a previously prepared research paper, or the equivalent, demonstrating analytical and interpretive skills.

Prerequisites include the following:

1. A working knowledge of movement
2. An acquaintance with some system of movement observation and analysis
3. Preparation in general historical and cultural studies

Deficiencies may be corrected with appropriate course work.

Course Work

Core curriculum normally to be completed in the first two years of residency includes the following:

DNCE 239 (Introduction to Graduate Study of Dance)

DNCE 254 (Political Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 255 (Historical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 257 (Rhetorical Approaches to Dance Studies)

DNCE 301 (Seminar in Dance Studies Pedagogy and Professional Development)

Two additional graduate-level courses (minimum 8 units) are required from other disciplines (not DNCE) related to the student's research interest. Courses must be taken for a letter grade and can include an upper-division undergraduate-level course paired with 2 units of 292 (Concurrent Analysis).

Four additional graduate-level courses (minimum 16 units) from Dance must be taken for a letter grade and can include, but are not limited to: DNCE 200-level seminar courses (DNCE 260 (E-Z), 264 & 267) in critical dance studies; DNCE 280; an upper-division undergraduate-level course paired with 2 units of 292 (Concurrent Analysis).

A maximum of one Dance MFA core course (DNCE 240 to 243) may be included as one of the four additional graduatelevel dance courses required.

Language Requirement

All students must show competence in at least one language other than English. Further requirements in specific forms of dance or music notation or ancient or contemporary languages may be determined for each student in consultation with relevant faculty and the graduate advisor of the program.

Written Qualifying Examination

Students must prepare one field for examination with each of four members of the committee in whose courses the student has ideally completed degree requirements. The committee is composed of two Dance faculty members, one of whom is chair, and two other members who may be Dance faculty or faculty who are not a UCR Dance faculty member or cooperating faculty member. The written qualifying examination may be completed as a "take-home" format (seven-day, open-book) or a "sit-in" format (two-hour exam periods for each field, conducted on site in the department, and completed in one five-day work week). The recommended page length for each exam is 10-12 pages (double-space).

Qualifying Essay

One quarter after successfully completing the written examination, students complete a rough draft of the qualifying essay, under the direction of the chair. Students finalize the qualifying essay and sit for the oral examination before the end of the following quarter. The qualifying essay is generally 25 pages (double-space) in length and demonstrates the student's ability to articulate a viable dissertation research project. It must consist of written work but may include other forms of video or film productions with the approval of the relevant committee and the graduate advisor.

Oral Qualifying Examination

Students must prepare a qualifying essay that proposes a viable dissertation research project and be examined by a five-person oral qualifying examination committee. The committee, chosen in consultation with the student, nominated by the department and appointed by the Vice Provost and Dean of Graduate Studies, consists of all four written examination committee members, plus a fifth oversight member. The five-person committee will be comprised of no more than two faculty members from outside the department, and no fewer than one faculty member from outside the department. All committee members should normally be voting members of the UC Academic Senate. Any exceptions must be accompanied by the nominee's CV and justification from the graduate advisor. The request will be evaluated by the Graduate Division based on the nominee having comparable education and experience to a UC Academic Senate member and that no other UCR senate faculty has the same knowledge. All members of the committee must be present either in person or virtually for the exam depending on the exam modality selected (see below).

The committee examines the adequacy of the student's preparation to conduct the research proposed in the qualifying essay. Advancement to candidacy for the doctoral degree depends on completing required course work, fulfilling language requirements, and passing the written examination, qualifying essay, and the oral examination.

The Dance department expects students to complete the entire examination process by the end of their tenth quarter in the program (end of the first quarter of their fourth year) to make satisfactory progress toward completing the degree.

Dissertation and Final Defense

A dissertation committee is composed of at least three members: a chair from Dance, a Dance faculty member, and either a Dance faculty member, or a faculty member from outside the department. All committee members should normally be voting members of the UC Academic Senate. Any exceptions must be accompanied by the nominee's CV and justification from the graduate advisor. The request will be evaluated by the Graduate Division based on the nominee having comparable education and experience to a UC Academic Senate member and that no other UCR senate faculty has the same knowledge. The committee directs and approves the research and writing of the dissertation. The dissertation must consist of written work but may include other forms of video or film productions with the approval of the relevant committee and the graduate advisor. It must present original scholarly work and be approved by the chair of the dissertation committee before the final defense. Students must have satisfactory performance on a final defense, conducted by the dissertation committee and open to all members of the faculty. The defense emphasizes the dissertation and related topics.

Modalities for Oral Qualifying Exam and Final Defense

Students have the option of in-person, hybrid, or remote modalities for oral qualifying exams and the final defense.

- In-Person – student and all committee members are in-person on campus
- Hybrid – student and at least one committee member is in-person
- Remote – student and all committee members are remote

The modality for the exam/defense will be decided based on consultation with the committee chairperson, the student, and the grad advisor, with the committee chairperson making the final determination.

Exceptions and changes to modalities must be approved by the graduate advisor. If the graduate advisor is the committee chairperson, exceptions and changes to modalities must be approved by the chair of the department. Exceptions and changes must be submitted in writing to the graduate advisor at least 24 hours before the date of the exam/defense.

Major

Data science studies the collection, management, and analysis of data to extract knowledge. It is a multidisciplinary program with core components from Computer Science and Statistics, and required application study in a variety of empirical disciplines. Courses span the discipline from theory to practice and prepare students for careers or graduate studies in data-intensive fields.

The B.S. in Data Science major is an intercollege major offered by the Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering and the College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences. A B.S. degree in Data Science is offered by each college. When students declare the major, they choose from which college they wish to have their degree awarded. Students whose degrees are awarded by the Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering are advised in and have their records maintained by the BCOE Office of Student Academic Affairs; students whose degrees are awarded by the College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences are advised in and have their records maintained by the CNAS Undergraduate Academic Advising Center. Breadth requirements vary by college; and students must fulfill the breadth requirements of the college they choose.

All undergraduates in the Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering must see an advisor at least annually. Visit student.engr.ucr.edu for details.

Master's Degree

M.S. in Computational Data Science

The Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering offers an M.S. program in Computational Data Science.

Admission

All applicants to this program must have completed a bachelor's degree or its approved equivalent from an accredited institution and to have attained undergraduate record that satisfies the standards established by the Graduate Division and University Graduate Council. Applicants must supply GRE General Test scores. Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the TEST of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System (IELTS) unless they have a degree from an institution where English is the exclusive language of instruction. Additionally, each applicant must submit letters of recommendation, as per the admission requirements. All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application.

Prerequisite Material

Applicants need experience in programming, software engineering, algorithms, and background in statistics. Competence in these areas is defined by the following UCR undergraduate courses (or equivalents):

CS 141, CS 100, MATH 010A, MATH 031, as well a course covering foundations of probability and statistics (like STAT 155 or EE 114)

Applicants who fail to meet this criterion may sometimes be admitted with course deficiencies, provided they take remedial steps to cover the deficiencies. A student who is deficient in a competency area may be asked to complete the corresponding UCR course with a letter grade of at least B, or to pass a challenge examination based on that course's final exam with a grade of at least B. All such remedial work cannot be counted towards the MS degree requirements and should be completed within the first year of graduate study, and in all cases the deficiency(s) must be corrected BEFORE a student can enroll in any graduate course from the same specialty area. The details will be decided by the Graduate Advisor of the program in consultation with the student.

Course Work

The M.S. in Computational Data Science requires the completion of 49 units of coursework, including a capstone project. There are no thesis or comprehensive exam options.

The coursework consists of 5 core courses, 6 elective courses, a professional development course and the capstone course. Elective courses are selected by the student from a list of possible courses; students can petition to select a course not on the list. Students who have completed similar courses elsewhere may petition for waiver of a required course or for substitution of an alternative course.

Core Courses (20 units):

All students must complete the same core courses.

- CS 252A/EE 251A – Data Analytics and Exploration
- CS 252B/EE 251B – Fundamentals of Data Science or CS 224 – Fundamentals of Machine Learning
- CS 226 – Big-Data Management or CS 236 – Database Management Systems
- CS 235 – Data Mining Techniques
- CS 108/STAT 108 – Data Science Ethics

Elective Courses (24 units):

The six electives must be selected from the following two lists of elective courses where at least four courses must be from list A. Students may petition for other elective courses; such petitions require approval from the program's graduate advisor. Courses used to satisfy the Core Courses requirements may not be used to satisfy the Elective Courses requirements.

Elective List A:

CS 205, CS222, CS 225, CS226 or CS236, CS 227, CS/EE 228, CS 229, CS 242, CS/EE 248, EE227/CS258, EE 231, EE 236, EE240, EE 244

Elective List B:

CS 210, CS 211, CS/EE 217, CS 234, EE 241, EE 243, EE 250

Professional Development Requirement

Students will satisfy the professional development requirement by enrolling in one of the following courses: one quarter of CS 287, or GDIV 403, or at least one unit of CS 298I.

Capstone Experience

Students must complete CS/EE 279 under the guidance of the capstone instructor member.

Normative Time to Degree

Six quarters (2 years).

Majors

The Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences offers B.S. degrees in Earth and Planetary Sciences, Geology and Geophysics. These degree programs are designed for students with a strong interest in acquiring academic understanding and relevant vocational training in the Earth and Planetary Sciences, and for students interested in secondary teaching with a science emphasis. The B.S. programs include fieldwork with field courses, and field trips in all appropriate courses.

Academic Advising

Undergraduate advising in the Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences is designed to allow close professional contact with faculty and staff. Counseling on graduation, departmental requirements and enrollment is handled by the major's professional academic advisors housed in the CNAS Undergraduate Academic Advising Center and the faculty undergraduate advisor for each major.

Faculty undergraduate advisors counsel students on career goals and research opportunities. The department recommends that students meet with their faculty advisor at least once each quarter to clarify career objectives and revise the program of study so it is commensurate with the developing interests and objectives of the student.

Teaching Credential

Teachers in the public schools in California must have a credential approved by the State Commission on Teacher Credentialing. The credential requires an undergraduate major, baccalaureate degree, and completion of a graduate credential program such as that offered by the School of Education at UCR.

Before admission and student teaching in a graduate credential program, the candidate must pass the California Basic Education Skills Test (CBEST) and demonstrate subject-matter proficiency by passing an examination. All candidates for a multiple subject credential to teach in the elementary grades must pass the Multiple Subjects, California Subject Exam for Teachers (CSET). Students are urged to start early, preferably as freshmen, selecting courses most helpful for this career. Details and counseling on the Prepare to Teach Program, a program for the multiple subject credential, are available in the Office of Interdisciplinary Programs, 2417 Humanities and Social Sciences, (951) 827-2743. Details and counseling on other programs are available in the Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences or the School of Education.

UCR does not yet have a state-approved subject matter undergraduate program for earth and planetary sciences majors who wish to teach at the secondary level. The Teaching Credential in Science, geoscience authorization, is required for teachers who want to teach earth science/geoscience in middle school and high school. Students who plan to get this credential must take the CSET exams in Geosciences and should make certain their academic program includes preparatory course work. The examination includes geoscience in depth and general science with introductory, college-level biology, chemistry, physics, and geoscience (geology, meteorology, oceanography, astronomy). CSET test guides are available at cset.nesinc.com.

Further information about courses, requirements, and examinations can be obtained in orientation meetings, the CalTeach-SMI Office (1114 Pierce Hall) and the School of Education (1124 Sproul Hall).

Earth and Planetary Sciences students interested in a secondary school science teaching career, who intend to obtain a Teaching Credential in Science, geoscience authorization, should pursue both the B.S. in Earth and Planetary Sciences or in Geology as well as the teaching credential from the School of Education. Students who want to have the option to become either a professional geoscientist or to teach earth science in secondary school should pursue the B.S. in Geology as well as the teaching credential from the School of Education.

Students in CNAS who intend to pursue a Teaching Credential in Science, with authorization in another science, should consider pursuing a minor within Earth and Planetary Sciences.

Earth and Planetary Sciences Major

Students who choose Earth and Planetary Sciences Major study the past, present, and future of our Earth through the interdisciplinary study of its various systems. Earth and Planetary Sciences majors choose between concentrations in Geosystems, Climate Change, Geobiology, Geophysics, and Planetary Sciences, which are explored from a combination of lab-based, field-based, and computational perspectives.

Geology Major

Students who choose the Geology major study the structure, composition, processes, and history of the Earth. In particular, the Geology major stresses features of the Earth's surface and interactions between its atmosphere, hydrosphere, biosphere, rocky crust, and interior. Through an emphasis on developing important skills, one of the goals of this program is to prepare students for Geology careers in the public, private, and academic sectors.

Geophysics Major

Students who choose the Geophysics major apply the principles and concepts of physics, mathematics, geology, and engineering to the study of the physical characteristics of the earth and other planets. They make measurements of gravity and magnetic fields, seismic waves, temperatures, and natural electric current. Geophysicists study these topics from the standpoint of the physics of solid bodies, gases, and fluids. Some geophysicists are field oriented, some laboratory oriented, some theoretical, and some combine these areas.

Graduate Programs

The Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences offers the M.S. and Ph.D. in Earth and Planetary Sciences.

Graduate education in the Earth and Planetary Sciences emphasizes all aspects of geology, geophysics and biogeochemistry as applied to understanding the Earth and other planetary bodies. Areas of research include the origin and evolution of life through geological time; astrobiology and the detection and modeling of exoplanets and their atmospheres; the theory, mechanisms and impacts of earthquakes and faulting; observing and modeling current and past climate change; modeling past and future global carbon and other biogeochemical cycles; and geophysical, geochemical and petrological studies of the structure and internal processes of planetary interiors. Integrated field, laboratory and numerical studies are encouraged.

Admission

An undergraduate degree in geology, geochemistry, geophysics or earth/planetary science is the normal preparation for graduate work; however, a degree from a related field of science or engineering or even select non-science disciplines may be appropriate. Applicants to graduate status must supply any standardized test scores required by the Graduate Division before admission.

Master's Degree

In addition to the general requirements listed under the Graduate Studies section of this catalog, the requirements for the M.S. degree in Earth and Planetary Sciences, under the Plan 1 (Thesis), are as follows.

Admission

Students must make up any deficiency in undergraduate preparation required for their area of study. The background required is determined by the graduate advisor in consultation with their faculty advisor. Courses taken to remedy background deficiencies are not applicable to the graduate degree. Such courses are typically designated in the letter of admission to the program sent by the dean of the Graduate Division to the student.

Biannual Reviews

All students must undergo biannual reviews by the departmental Graduate Progress Committee. A student's progress is assessed in these reviews, and the committee may recommend changes in a student's plans after these reviews.

Course Work

All students must enroll each quarter in the Graduate Seminar in Geosciences (GEO 250). Students must attend the weekly Hewett Club lecture series.

Students must complete a minimum of 36 units of course work in the major and related subjects and obtain advance approval of a coherent plan of study from the graduate advisor.

A maximum of 12 upper-division units beyond the requirements for the bachelor's degree may be applied to the 36-unit requirement.

Students must complete a minimum of 12 units of graduate courses, which must include at least four graduate-level instructional courses taught by four different faculty members as approved by the graduate advisor.

All graduate students must complete professional development training by the end of their 9th quarter. This is fulfilled by taking GEO 201 A and GEO 201B before taking their Ph.D. Oral Exam.

Subject to the approval of the graduate advisor, a limited number of upper-division courses in the major and related sciences, if not required for the bachelor's degree and not taken previously, may be accepted for graduate credit.

Thesis and Final Oral Examination

Before the end of the third quarter of study and before embarking on research, the student must submit a written thesis proposal to the graduate progress committee. After approval of the proposal, the student must submit a thesis based on original work for approval by a thesis committee. A maximum of 12 units of thesis research may be counted toward the 36-unit minimum.

Students present an open research seminar as a final oral examination, which is advertised to all the students and faculty in the Earth and Planetary Sciences Department.

Normative Time to Degree

7 quarters

Global Climate and Environmental Change (GCEC)

The GCEC MS track is a field and laboratory based multidisciplinary program focused on the evidence for and controls of past and present climate change. Candidates must complete the following:

Course Work

Thesis Work

Before the end of the third quarter students must nominate a faculty advisor and identify a thesis topic. Before embarking on research the student must submit a thesis proposal based on original work for approval by a thesis committee. A maximum of 8 units of research credit can be counted toward the 36 unit minimum. Students present an open research seminar as a final oral examination.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences offers the Ph.D. in Earth and Planetary Sciences. In addition to the general University requirements of the Graduate Division as found in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog, the Ph.D. in Earth and Planetary Sciences normally requires the following.

Biannual Reviews

All students meet with the Graduate Progress Committee during their first week at UCR to discuss general interests, goals, and plans. The committee recommends courses designed to prepare a student for research and to correct deficiencies in background. This committee also reviews a student's progress biannually and may recommend transfer to the master's program if normal progress is not maintained.

Course Work

Students must complete at least four graduate-level instructional courses taught by four different faculty members as approved by the graduate advisor. Up to four 100 level classes can count subject to Graduate Advisor approval. Course work used in satisfaction of the M.S. degree may be accepted with the graduate advisor's approval. All students must enroll each quarter in the Graduate Seminar in Geosciences (GEO 250). Students are also required to attend the weekly Hewett Club lecture series.

Written and Oral Qualifying Examinations

The written exam will consist of a written research proposal or proposals as detailed in the Graduate Handbook. The proposal topics must be approved by an examination committee to ensure breadth. The committee reviews the proposals and, if acceptable, recommends proceeding to the oral qualifying examination. An oral examination committee appointed by the dean of the Graduate Division examines the adequacy of the student's preparation to conduct the proposed research. Advancement to candidacy in the Ph.D. program follows successful completion of the oral examination.

The Oral Qualifying Exam can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the situation, with the advisor making the final determination. Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. The chair of the committee must be physically present for a Hybrid exam.

All Ph.D. candidates must satisfy the course requirements and have passed their written and oral qualifying exams within two years of entering the program, otherwise they will not be eligible to continue in the Ph.D. track. Exceptions can only be granted by the Graduate Advisor or by the Chair.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

A dissertation normally evolves from one of the research proposals. The dissertation must present original scholarly work and be approved by a dissertation committee before the student may take the final oral examination. Students must have satisfactory performance on the final oral examination given by the dissertation committee. Major emphasis in this examination is on the dissertation and related topics.

The Final Defense can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the situation, with the advisor making the final determination. Students presenting their Final Defense In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present their Final Defense on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote.

Majors

Economics studies the production and distribution of goods and services, as well as the way in which productive activity helps shape social existence. Economists are concerned with the factors determining national income, inflation, unemployment, output, growth and inequality (macroeconomics), as well as the behavior of individual decision-making units such as households and firms (microeconomics). Economists are also concerned with the role of markets, money and interest rates, the forces affecting international trade, and many other problems of production and distribution.

Economics is the basis for many careers, some of which require only a B.A. degree while others require more advanced work. Possible careers include, but are not limited to, business, government, education and law.

Students in the Economics Department can choose from four degree programs. The B.A. is the most general degree offered. It is appropriate background for a wide variety of purposes, including graduate study and professional schools. However, those planning to attend a graduate program in economics may need more quantitative training than the B.A. requires. Students who are considering attending a graduate program in economics should consult with their undergraduate advisor. The department offers the B.A. degree in a joint program with Administrative Studies for students that would like to partner their economics training with courses in general business fields. The department also offers the B.A. degree in a joint program with Law & Society for students who would like to prepare to attend law school or work in the public sector. The Business Economics B.A. degree guides students to take economic courses that will provide more specific preparation for careers in business administration or management or for graduate work in business.

Graduate Program

The Department of Economics offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Economics.

The graduate Economics program is designed to prepare students for research and teaching in academic institutions as well as for positions in government, international agencies, and the private sector.

Admission

Students are normally admitted only in the fall quarter. Applicants should apply electronically, at graduate.ucr.edu. Students submit the completed application, GRE scores, three letters of recommendation (from persons familiar with the student's academic work), and transcripts in duplicate of previous academic work.

Master's Program

There are two tracks to the M.A. degree. Track I (applied economics) has a capstone project requirement. Track II (economic theory) has a cumulative examination requirement. Students interested in Track I (applied economics) should apply for admission to the M.A. degree program. Students should have at least two courses in calculus, a course in statistics, and some upper-division economics courses, but exceptions will be considered for students whose applications have offsetting strengths. Admission to the Master of Arts degree program does not guarantee later admission to the Ph.D. program. Those interested in Track II (economic theory) should apply for admission to Ph.D. program.

Doctoral Program

The department encourages applicants from a variety of backgrounds, but a good understanding of intermediate microeconomics, intermediate macroeconomics, multivariate calculus, and elementary linear algebra is necessary to begin taking the core requirements, described below. In addition, two courses in basic probability and statistics or econometrics are required before beginning the core econometrics sequence. Students who do not satisfy the requirements, or who have been out of school for several years, should consider enrolling in the one-year M.A. program.

Master of Arts Degree

Master of Arts, Track I: Applied Economics

The M.A. with a concentration in applied economics is a one-year program designed primarily for students who intend to work as economists immediately after receiving the degree. ## Doctoral Degree

The Ph.D. is designed for students who aim to pursue research careers in academic institutions, government, international agencies, and the private sector. Students first complete a core curriculum in economic theory and quantitative methods. These courses provide training in the fundamental concepts and research methods of the discipline. Following demonstration of professional competence in the core areas, students specialize in theoretical or applied areas of economics. This leads to the development of independent research and the writing of the Ph.D. dissertation.

Core Requirements

1. Economic Theory

Students must complete the following:

- a) ECON 200A, ECON 200B, ECON 200C (Microeconomic Theory)
- b) ECON 201A, ECON 201B, ECON 201C (Macroeconomic Theory)

All students must pass two cumulative examinations: one in microeconomic theory (covering topics encompassed in the course sequence ECON 200A, ECON 200B, and ECON 200C) and one in macroeconomic theory (covering the topics in ECON 201A, ECON 201B, ECON 201C). Both examinations are given at the end of the first year, and at the beginning of the fall quarter. After completing the sequence of courses, students must sit for each examination at each offering until they have passed the requirement. An unexcused failure to sit for a required examination will be regarded as a failure. All students can have two attempts. Students defending the dissertation in-person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If the hybrid mode is chosen, the student is expected to defend the dissertation on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. The chair(s) of the committee must be physically present for a hybrid defense. If the defense is given remotely, all committee members and student have the option to attend remotely.

Education, Society and Human Development Major

The Education, Society, and Human Development Major builds a theoretical foundation, presents applied understandings in the study of education, and explores the varied contexts of learning over the life course.

Program faculty bring multiple disciplinary perspectives to their research and courses, including cognitive sciences, developmental psychology, understanding of the exceptional child, applied behavior analysis, the relationship between education, society and culture, educational policy and leadership, measurement and assessment, and issues in higher education.

Students will benefit from completing the major because they will be exposed to critical theories that investigate how education has been used to create, maintain, and reinforce social stratification. In addition, students will develop a historical and contemporary awareness of different learning settings, and gain a strong foundation in human development, assessment and interventions in the education context. Students who are interested in teaching elementary, middle, or high schools should consult an academic advisor in the SOE Undergraduate Programs Office about combining an appropriate major and minor or completing a double major in order to develop appropriate expertise in the subject they plan to teach.

Education, Society, and Human Development majors are also prepared for other types of instructional, administrative or advocacy positions in programs or organizations such as those focused on early childcare, out-of-school learning, or adult learning. Additionally, students who complete the major are prepared to enter education-related career fields in the private, non-profit, and public sectors including working with special populations, in legal fields, medical environments, and the arts. Students interested in graduate study will be well prepared to pursue advanced degree programs in education or related fields. Undergraduates enrolled in the Education, Society, and Human Development degree are encouraged to complete courses inside and outside of the major to enhance career preparation and pursue personal interests. With advanced planning, students in the major can complete a minor or a second major in another discipline. The B.A. in Education, Society, and Human Development is not a teacher credential program. (See School of Education section on Teaching Credentials and Masters programs.)

First-Year Student Seminars

The EDUC 093A, EDUC 093B, and EDUC 093C courses are a year-long seminar series designed for first-year students that meets weekly with several aspirations including community building, orientation to the campus and the major, and academic support. The long-term goal of this seminar series is to not only set the foundation for the major but to build an experience that evolves over the course of students' experience at UCR.

The seminars are for first-year students in the Education, Society, and Human Development major; first-year students are given enrollment priority. The fall seminar carries 2 units of academic credit. The winter and spring courses carry 1 unit of academic credit each. The units are not applied toward major requirements, however the units count toward overall degree completion. The seminar series is recommended, but not required for completion of the degree. The seminars are graded on an "S/NC" basis.

Transfer Student Seminar

The EDUC 094 course is a 2-unit seminar (designed for new, incoming transfer students) that meets weekly for the purpose of community building, orientation to the campus and the Education major, and academic support. The long term goal of this seminar is to not only set the foundation for the major, but to build a learning community experience that follows students over the course of their program at UCR. New, incoming transfer students are given enrollment priority into this course which carries 2 units of academic credit. These units are not applied toward major requirements. The seminar is recommended, but not required for completion of the degree. The seminars are graded on an "S/NC" basis.

Transfer Students

Admission is selective and based on all transferable coursework with a minimum GPA of 2.4 (2.8 for non-residents). There is no prerequisite "Major" coursework required. Meeting the minimum eligibility requirements does not guarantee admission.

Education Minor

The Education minor offers to any undergraduate student an introduction to issues and practices of education and research in public schools. Students from any major are invited to pursue a minor in Education.

Students in the Education minor may select from a variety of courses that may focus on a particular interest or may sample across aspects of the curriculum. Specific areas of interest that are reflected in the course offerings include: Special education, psychology, higher education, policy and leadership, culture and language, issues of classism, racism, sexism, heterosexism, diversity and equity, social justice, curriculum and teaching strategies, qualitative and quantitative methods, and educational research.

The School of Education has a list of Education minor themes consisting of topic areas with a list of courses. Students can visit the Undergraduate Education section on SOE's website at education.ucr.edu to view the list of Education minor themes and suggested coursework. Students may also consult with the Program Advisor on the themes and which option(s) to pursue.

The Education minor does not lead to a teaching credential; however, some of the courses will satisfy UCR Teacher Education Program requirements. Students who are interested in pursuing a teaching credential should contact the Teacher Education Program at (951) 827-5225.

Program Requirements

The Education minor consists of the satisfactory completion of at least 24 units in courses identified for the Education Minor Program. At least 16 units must be completed in upper division courses.

Graduate Programs

The School of Education offers three degree programs—Doctor of Philosophy, Master of Arts and Master of Education—as well as a variety of teacher credential programs. Each of these programs is described in detail below.

General university requirements, such as residence and unit requirements, are in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. Policies and Procedures for Graduate Degree Programs may be obtained from the Graduate Programs Office.

Admission

Admission is based upon many factors, including but not limited to GPA, interview, statement of purpose, personal history, resume/curriculum vitae, match with program/faculty, non-academic achievements, personal qualities, diversity of personal background and experience, academic history, writing sample, personal background, career objectives, and letters of recommendation from writers knowledgeable about the candidate's ability to succeed in graduate study.

Admission for the doctoral degree is based on strong academic preparation at the baccalaureate level. A master's degree in education such as that offered at UCR or a master's degree in an ancillary field is desirable but not required. Doctoral students begin their programs in the fall quarter.

Detailed admission information is available at education.ucr.edu.

Master of Arts

Candidates enrolled in this program normally have completed an undergraduate major or its equivalent in a subject field other than education.

Concentration

Areas of concentration include Education, Society, and Culture; Educational Psychology; Neuroscience and Education; Research, Evaluation, Measurement and Statistics; Special Education and Autism; School Psychology (for students working toward the Ph.D.); and STEM Education and Equity. Only students matriculating in a School of Education Ph.D. program in School Psychology, may earn a M.A. degree in Education with concentration in School Psychology. Before the end of the first quarter, the student's advisor develops a program plan that specifies the courses the student will take.

The M.A. with concentration in Education, Society, and Culture; Educational Psychology; Special Education and Autism; or STEM Education and Equity gives students the option of completing Plan I (Thesis) or Plan II (Comprehensive Examination).

The M.A. with concentration in School Psychology or Neuroscience and Education only allows students to complete the Plan I (Thesis option). The M.A. concentration in Research, Evaluation, Measurement and Statistics only allows students to take Plan II (comprehensive examination option).

Information about each area of concentration is available at education.ucr.edu.

Plan I (Thesis)

Students complete a minimum of 36 upper-division and graduate units. At least 24 of these units are in graduate courses.

A maximum of 12 units may be in graduate research for the thesis.

At the beginning of the second, and generally not later than the third quarter of full-time work, candidates submit a plan for the thesis to their committee. Candidates also list courses to be taken for developing competence in their area of specialization. The plan is reviewed and approved by a committee of three faculty members. The candidate submits the final thesis to the committee for approval. Upon successful completion and approval of the thesis, the student is recommended to the Graduate Division for the M.A. degree.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Students must complete a minimum of 36 quarter units in upper-division and graduate courses in Education and related fields as defined in existing programs. At least 18 of the 36 units must be in graduate courses, and none in graduate research for the thesis.

A faculty member from the program area specialization is appointed by the graduate advisor to guide the candidate. A program plan must be filed with the graduate advisor by the end of the first quarter of residency. Upon or near completion of course work, the student applies to take a comprehensive written examination. Upon successful completion of the examination, the candidate is recommended to the Graduate Division for the M.A. degree.

Coursework

Candidates entering the M.A. program take a series of courses based on their area of concentration.

Master of Education

A Master of Education (M.Ed.) degree program is offered that allows students to select from six concentrations. The GRE is not required for admission to the M.Ed. program. No thesis or comprehensive examination is required. Instead, students complete an analytical project that builds on course work and links educational theory and research with the dynamics of teaching, learning, and leadership.

Education Policy Analysis and Leadership Concentration

This M.Ed. emphasis prepares students for work examining school and campus reform and policy at the local, state, and national levels.

Students may have the opportunity to complete an internship of up to 8 units in consultation with their faculty advisor. The internship is an optional component and not required for degree completion.

The emphasis can also be completed through a collaboration between the School of Education and the University Extension by completing an approved Extension certificate program that addresses issues of educational policy and leadership. Up to 9 units of 400 level Extension certificate courses can be used toward the minimum 36-unit total required for the degree. The student must have completed the approved Extension certificate prior to admission to this program. The committee consists of the student's faculty advisor, three additional faculty members from the School of Education, and one faculty member from outside the school. In preparation for the oral qualifying examination, students develop a pre-proposal, setting forth the direction of their dissertation. Once the faculty advisor determines that the pre-proposal is ready for the oral examination, it is distributed to the oral qualifying committee. The committee uses the pre-proposal as a focus for examining the student, but the questioning may go beyond the pre-proposal. Students pass the oral qualifying examination when the committee is satisfied that 1) the pre-proposal, as well as the student's grasp of the theoretical and empirical issues at its core, leads in a productive direction toward a competent dissertation, and 2) the student has demonstrated competence in areas covered by the written examination that are also addressed in the oral examination.

Mode options for the Oral Qualifying Exam are as follows:

- In-person – all committee members and student physically present on campus at UCR
- Hybrid – some committee members/student in-person, some committee members/student remote (no limitations for total number of members online)
- Remote – all committee members and student attend remotely

The student and approved committee will decide which mode is appropriate for the exam. Additionally, the mode will be determined based on documented accommodations through Student Disability Resource Center or Human Resources/Academic Personnel. Only one mode is required to complete the exam. If in-person or hybrid mode is utilized, a staff member will be present to help setup Information Technology (IT) equipment the day of the exam or provide training to the student/committee member in advance of the exam to operate IT equipment independently.

Interested students who are entering their junior year should check with their academic advisor for information on eligibility and other details.

Admission

All applicants for the M.S. and Ph.D. programs must submit official scores for the GRE General Test. All applicants whose native language is not English and who do not have a degree from an institution where English is the exclusive language of instruction must complete the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) with a minimum score of 550 (paper-based), 220 (computer-based), or 90 (Internet-based).

Applicants must meet the general admission requirements of the Riverside Division of the Academic Senate and the UCR Graduate Council as set forth in the UC Riverside Graduate Student Application. ## Master of Science

The Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering offers the M.S. degree in Electrical Engineering.

General university requirements are listed in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. Students may obtain an M.S. degree in Electrical Engineering through either Plan I (Thesis) or Plan II (Comprehensive Examination). The normative time for a student to complete the M.S. degree under both Plan I or Plan II is six quarters (two years). Students who are admitted with deficiencies may require up to three additional quarters.

Plan I (Thesis)

Students must complete 36 units of approved graduate work in Electrical Engineering and related areas such as Computer Science and Materials Science and Engineering. At least 24 of these units must be courses numbered between 200 and 279. At least 12 units must be in graduate research (courses numbered 297 or 299). Colloquium units (CS 287, EE 259, MSE 250, MSE 251) and courses numbered 291 are not counted towards the 36 unit requirement.

Students choosing Plan I must submit a master's thesis in accordance with the general requirements of the University. The thesis must be original research work, and demonstrate the student's ability to explore a research area, acquire in-depth knowledge of the chosen research topic, and make a research contribution. The thesis must be approved by a committee of at least three faculty members. The thesis must be defended in a two-hour examination open to the public, beginning with a brief presentation by the candidate, and followed by a question-and-answer session.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Students must complete 36 units of approved graduate or upper-division undergraduate coursework in Electrical Engineering and related areas such as Computer Science and Materials Science and Engineering. At least 24 of these units must be graduate-level courses numbered between 200 and 279. To satisfy the remaining 12 units, students may use only

EE courses numbered between 200 and 289 excluding colloquium units (CS 287, EE 259, MSE 250, and MSE 251), upper-division undergraduate EE courses numbered 115 and above (with the exception of EE 116, 120, and 132) and up to 8 units of Directed Studies (290). Colloquium units (CS 287, EE 259, MSE 250, and MSE 251) and courses numbered 291 and higher are not counted towards the 36-unit requirement.

In addition to the course requirements of Plan II, students must pass a comprehensive examination administered by the program.

Normative Time to Degree

Six quarters (two years)

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering offers the Ph.D. degree in Electrical Engineering.

Admission

Students with backgrounds in Electrical Engineering or other related areas are encouraged to apply. An M.S. degree is not required for admission to the Ph.D. program. Under special circumstances, applicants lacking undergraduate preparation in core Electrical Engineering areas related to their field of research may be admitted, but must take the appropriate undergraduate courses to correct the deficiencies within the first year of graduate study. Courses taken for this purpose do not count towards an advanced degree.

Course Work

Students must complete at least 36 units of approved graduate coursework in Electrical Engineering and related areas such as Computer Science, Materials Science and Engineering, or other approved subject areas. Only courses numbered between 200 and 279, excluding Colloquium courses (CS 287, EE 259, MSE 250, and MSE 251), may be counted towards this requirement. With Graduate Advisor approval, graduate courses taken and completed as part of a related MS program at UCR may count towards the 36 units of coursework required for the Electrical Engineering PhD program. Students who are admitted with an M.S. degree from a different institution may use up to 16 units of equivalent courses taken during their M.S. study to count towards the requirement.

Students must complete a minimum of six quarters (two years) in residence at UCR with a GPA of 3.00 or better. Students must establish a course plan in coordination with their research advisor or the program Graduate Advisor. The course plan should lend support to the students' research area, while adding breadth to their overall program. Students may need to take considerably more than 36 units to establish breadth and depth of knowledge in their area of research.

Advancement to Candidacy

A student advances to candidacy after he/she has passed the preliminary examination and the oral qualifying examination, as described below.

Preliminary Examination

The purpose of the preliminary examination is to screen candidates for continuation in the doctoral program. The examination is administered by the graduate program committee. Students must solve problems from five courses in one of the three Exam Areas:

- signals, systems, and machine intelligence
- nano materials and devices, or
- VLSI Circuits and Systems

At least two of these five problems must be from the "basic" courses and two must be from the "advanced" courses. The fifth problem can be either from the "basic" or the "advanced" courses designated for each Exam Area. Students who did not pass at the Ph.D. level in their first trial will be given a second chance. In the second attempt, they will be required to solve problems only from courses they did not pass at the Ph.D. level in their first attempt.

Plan II M.S. candidates who took the M.S. comprehensive examination and successfully passed at the Ph.D. level are given credit for having passed the Ph.D. preliminary examination.

Oral Qualifying Examination

Students are expected to demonstrate that they have a thorough understanding of their research field, and are capable of doing cutting-edge research. For that purpose, students must choose a research topic under the guidance of their faculty major professor and orally present to a Qualifying Committee, which is appointed by the Graduate Division based on nominations from the department.

The presentation must be accompanied by an Oral Exam Report, written in proper technical English and in the style of a typical Electrical Engineering conference or journal publication. This report should clearly describe the proposed problem under study, demonstrate substantial knowledge of the topic and related issues, present the research results the student has obtained, and indicate the plans for future work. Students must demonstrate ability to carry out a program of independent advanced research and to report the results in accordance with standards observed in recognized technical journals.

The Oral Qualifying examination is closed to the public.

The student must complete this requirement in no more than two attempts. The normative time for taking the Oral Qualifying Exam is by the end of the third year.

Dissertation Examination and Defense

After advancement to candidacy, the student must form a Doctoral Dissertation Committee chaired by his or her major professor. The committee will consist of at least three senate faculty members with at least two members from the Electrical and Computer Engineering department.

When the Doctoral Dissertation Committee determines that a suitable draft of the dissertation has been presented, a dissertation examination and defense for the student is scheduled. The defense consists of a public seminar followed by questions from the committee members and the audience.

Oral Qualifying Examination

The Oral Qualifying Exam can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person, Hybrid, and Remote. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination.

Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present.

If Hybrid is chosen, then some committee members/student are expected to be in person and some committee members/student attend remotely.

If Remote is chosen, then all committee members and the student attend the exam remotely.

Final Defense

The same rules as that of the Oral Qualifying examination.

Normative Time to Degree

12 quarters (15 quarters for students without an M.S. in Electrical Engineering)

Preparation for Careers in Teaching

All doctoral students are recommended to be employed as teaching assistants for at least three quarters during their graduate career. The department is developing special courses to aid in the learning of effective teaching methods, such as handling discussion/lab sessions and preparing and grading examinations.

Contact the Graduate Student Affairs Officer at the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, (951) 827-2484, or visit ece.ucr.edu for information on graduate courses.

Professional Development Requirement

All incoming M.S. and Ph.D. students must satisfactorily complete the Fall, Winter, and Spring offerings of EE 259, Colloquium in Electrical Engineering.

Additionally, students in the Ph.D. program must submit a Professional Development Report that details the students' efforts in developing their technical writing and presentation skills. This report should be submitted to and approved by the Graduate Committee, as a prerequisite for filing the Oral Qualifying Committee nomination form. Specific requirements for the Professional Development Report are determined by the Graduate Committee.

Graduate Program

The Department of English offers the Ph.D. degree in English.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of English offers the Ph.D. degree in English.

The doctoral program in English prepares students to become informed teachers and scholar-critics capable of significant original literary scholarship.

Admission

Admission is open to qualified candidates with a B.A. or M.A. degree, preferably in English or a related field. Students with an M.A. in another field may be required to take additional course work.

Course Work

ENGL 200 is required for all new graduate students. Students entering the program without an M.A. must complete (with a grade of "B" or better) a minimum of 52 units of course work, including ENGL200. Prior to taking Qualifying Examination I, students must meet the course work requirement of the M.A. Degree (36 units). Upon successfully passing Qualifying Examination I, students must complete at least an additional four seminars (16 units) in 200-level course work. The candidate with an M.A. from another institution must complete (with a grade of "B" or better) a minimum of 36 units of course work in 200-level courses, including ENGL200. No courses graded S/NC may be used for these required doctoral units, including ENGL 280, ENGL 292, ENGL 297, and ENGL 299. When coursework is drawing to a close, all students, in consultation with the graduate advisor, and upon approval by the graduate committee, select three fields of study to prepare for their Qualifying Exam II. Once course work requirements are satisfied, all students take the Qualifying Examination II and complete a dissertation.

Qualifying Examinations I and II

At the end of the sixth quarter, students who have entered the program with a B.A. become eligible to receive an M.A. upon completion of the Qualifying Examination I. For this examination, students submit a portfolio of two essays, that have been substantially revised in consultation with the examining committee, and a 1000- to 1500- word metacommentary explaining the aims and achievements of the essays and their contributions to a coherent research agenda. The student is then examined orally for one hour on the portfolio and two distinct fields related to the two essays. Following successful completion of this examination and a review of the entire student file, the graduate committee recommends the awarding of the M.A. degree. (The Qualifying Examination I is waived for students with an M.A. from another institution.)

After the completion of all course work, students take the Qualifying Examination II to be advanced to candidacy. The Qualifying Exam II is three hours long. The oral examination includes a short presentation by the student followed by questions and comments from the examining committee based on portfolio materials the student has submitted and the oral presentation. Following the successful completion of this examination, the student will be advanced to candidacy if all coursework and language requirements are also completed.

The Oral Qualifying Exam can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person, Remote, or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss and make the final determination together which mode best suits the subject matter. Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present, and with staff present to assist the student on campus. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote, and with staff present to assist the student on campus. The chair of the committee must be physically present for a Hybrid exam. If Remote is chosen, the chair of the committee must be the host or co-host of a video enabled meeting.

Professional Development

The English department is aware of the current challenges facing our graduate students when they apply for academic and non-academic jobs while ABD or right after graduating. We have implemented a professionalization program consisting of information sessions, invited speakers, and seminars/workshops to address these challenges. This program will help make our graduate students more competitive on the academic job market and help them explore career options outside the academy. We wish to highlight ENGL410 Seminar in Professional Development, a 2-unit course designed to help students develop their teaching skills, academic publishing, and job application documents. Graduate students will need to take at least one ENGL410 (2 units), graded S/NC, to fulfill their professional development requirement and can take up to 6 units because course content may change each quarter.

Dissertation and Final Defense

The dissertation should be related to the individualized course of study preceding it and should draw out the best research and critical talents of the candidate.

Before the dissertation is given final approval, a public dissertation defense is required. The defense must be advertised to the campus community and is open to all who wish to attend. Following the public defense, the student meets with the dissertation committee to discuss the student's dissertation in accordance with the regulations of the Graduate Division.

For a more detailed description of the requirements for the Ph.D., contact the Graduate Assistant, Department of English.

The Final Defense can be completed in one of the following modes: In-Person, Remote, or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss and make the final determination together which mode best suits the subject matter. Students defending In-Person are expected to be present on campus with all committee members physically present, and with staff present to assist the student on campus. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to defend on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote, and with staff present to assist the student on campus. The chair of the committee must be physically present for a Hybrid defense. If Remote is chosen, the chair of the committee must be the host or co-host of a video enabled meeting.

Major

The Department of Entomology offers undergraduate programs leading to either the B.S. or the B.A. degree. The B.S. degree offers students with a strong interest in the natural sciences an opportunity to emphasize this aspect of their education. The B.A. degree is available to students who wish to obtain a broader background in the humanities and social sciences than is required of students in the B.S. program.

Information on the programs and course requirements is available at CNAS Academic Advising Center, 1223 Pierce Hall. Counseling, course recommendations, and information on education and career goals are provided by the Undergraduate Faculty Advisors, Dr. Dong-Hwan Choe, 382 Entomology and Dr. John Heraty, 138 Entomology.

Transfer Selection Criteria

Applicants to majors in the College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences are selected on the basis of academic preparation, as assessed by their GPA and the strength of preparation for the intended major. A GPA of at least 2.70 is required. (This is a baseline GPA for consideration and not a guarantee of admission.) The GPA cutoff for Transfer admissions will be set each year by the appropriate Divisional Dean in consultation with the Executive Committee and the Chairs, and may differ by program depending on Transfer enrollment capacity.

In addition, applicants will need to complete college courses comparable to at least two of the following UCR year-long sequences in order to meet selection criteria for this major. Courses must be completed with "C" grades or better:

MATH 007A or MATH 009A and MATH 007B or MATH 009B (mandatory)

And at least one sequence from:

1. BIOL 005A, BIOL 051A or BIOL 020 and BIOL 005B (and BIOL 005C, if articulated)
2. CHEM 001A, CHEM 011A, CHEM 001B, CHEM 011B, CHEM 001C, and CHEM 011C

- Organic chemistry (one-year lower-division), each course completed with a grade of "C" or better
- PHYS 002A, PHYS 02LA, PHYS 002B, PHYS 02LB, PHYS 002C, and PHYS 02LC
- PHYS 040A, PHYS 040B, and PHYS 040C
- MATH 009C, MATH 010A, MATH 010B, and MATH 046

Courses must be completed with a letter grade, with no grade lower than a "C."

Students should visit assist.org for updated and comprehensive major preparation requirements.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences, Colleges and Programs section.

Some of the following requirements for the major may also fulfill some of the college's breadth requirements. Consult with a department advisor for course planning.

Major Requirements

The major requirements for both the B.A. and the B.S. degrees in Entomology are as follows:

- Lower-division requirements (64 units)
  - BIOL 005A, BIOL 05LA or BIOL 020, BIOL 005B, BIOL 005C
  - PHYS 002A, PHYS 002B, PHYS 002C, PHYS 02LA, PHYS 02LB, PHYS 02LC
  - MATH 007A or MATH 009A, MATH 007B or MATH 009B
  - CHEM 001A, CHEM 001B, CHEM 001C, CHEM 01LA, CHEM 01LB, CHEM 01LC, CHEM 008A or CHEM 08HA, CHEM 008B or CHEM 08HB, CHEM 008C or CHEM 08HC, CHEM 08LA or CHEM 8HLA, CHEM 08LB or CHEM 8HLB, CHEM 08LC or CHEM 8HLC.
  - STAT 010
- Upper-division requirements (46 units)
  - ENTM 100/BIOL 100, ENTM 107, ENTM 173/BIOL 173, ENTM 180, and 4 units in any combination of ENTM 190, ENTM 197, ENTM 199, or ENTM 199H
  - Sixteen (16) additional units of entomology electives, which may include up to 2 additional units of ENTM 190, ENTM 197, ENTM 199 or ENTM 199H
  - BCH 100
  - BIOL 102
  - BIOL 107A

Upper division courses in BIOL, BPSC, and related programs including but not limited to BIOL 151 and BPSC 133 are suggested to acquire a background in the life sciences appropriate for an Entomology major.

For students intending to specialize at the graduate level in insect toxicology or insect physiology, biochemistry, and molecular biology, it is recommended that the BCH 110A, BCH 110B, and BCH 110C sequence and BCH 102 be substituted in place of an equal number of upper-division course units in life sciences. Due to course content overlap, credit is not awarded for BCH 110A, BCH 110B, or BCH 110C if it has already been awarded for BCH 100.

Combined Entomology B.S. + Entomology M.S. Program

The College of Natural and Agricultural Science offers a combined five-year B.S.+M.S. program in Entomology, designed to allow successful UCR Entomology B.S. graduates to complete the Master of Science degree in Entomology in one year (Plan I, Thesis).

Applicants to the Combined Entomology B.S.+M.S. program (including transfer students) should apply by the end of their junior year, providing that the student is a UCR Entomology B.S. student with cumulative GPA at least 3.0 overall and 3.3 GPA in the Entomology major. The application to the Combined B.S.+M.S. program must include a Statement of Interest and Eligibility, at least two recommendation letters from UCR Academic Senate faculty members, one of which should include the prospective thesis advisor and at least one of which must be Entomology faculty. Matriculation into the graduate portion of the combined degree program occurs in the Fall term following senior year, provided: (a) the M.S. application is accepted, (b) throughout senior year, the student is an Entomology B.S. major with cumulative GPA 3.0 or higher, (c) by the end of senior year, the student completes the Entomology B.S. degree requirements.

Incoming freshman students who apply to the Entomology B.S. program may simultaneously apply for preliminary admission into the combined degree program provided their high-school GPA is at least 3.6, they satisfy the Entry-Level Writing requirement prior to matriculation, and they have sufficient math preparation to enroll in MATH 7A (Calculus for the Life Sciences) or 9A (First-Year Calculus Part 1) upon arrival. Preliminary conditional

Major

The Department of Environmental Sciences offers B.A. and B.S. degrees in Environmental Sciences. Students are encouraged to concentrate their studies in one of five specialization areas: Soil Sciences, Hydrologic Sciences, Atmospheric Sciences, Environmental Toxicology, and Environmental Management.

Modern human activities related to natural resource development, agriculture, urbanization, industry, and transportation are placing unprecedented pressure on the earth's life support systems. Changes taking place in atmospheric physics and chemistry, land cover, freshwater and marine resources, and chemical cycling threaten the ability of human society to sustainably meet current and future needs. Science-based solutions are needed to sustainably manage our natural resources and improve public health. To help meet these challenges, our program emphasizes training for students in the biological, chemical, and physical aspects of environmental sciences and health, centered on the major environmental media of air, soil, water, and the biosphere.

The structure of the Environmental Sciences curriculum provides a broad scope of instruction that enables students to explore various disciplines and professions focused on solving environmental problems. All students majoring in Environmental Sciences must complete a set of "core requirements" consisting of courses that provide a basic understanding of the physical, biological, and social sciences and their application to the analysis of environmental processes and management issues. In addition to the core requirements, students must complete 8 units of lower-division and 20 units of upper-division elective courses.

Students have the option to select their electives from different specialization areas or to focus their training in one of the five specialization areas based on their own educational and career objectives. The specialization areas of Soil Sciences, Hydrologic Sciences, or Atmospheric Sciences are suitable for students wishing to maintain a broad range of choices in technically-oriented environmental professions such as pollution control, hazardous materials management, public health, natural resource management, environmental monitoring, and impact analysis. These options also provide the necessary background for graduate study in soil science, water resources, or atmospheric sciences as well as interdisciplinary areas such as ecosystem science and forestry. The Environmental Toxicology specialization area emphasizes the chemistry and biochemistry of toxic substances in the environment, preparing students for careers dealing with the control of contaminants in various environmental media as well as related fields such as public health and industrial hygiene. The Environmental Management specialization area is oriented for the social context of environmental sciences and prepares students for careers dealing with environmental regulation, land-use planning, environmental impact analysis, and administration of environmental protection programs.

Environmental Internship Program

The Environmental Internship Program offers students opportunities to work with government agencies, private firms, and nonprofit organizations involved in environmental affairs. As excursions into professional life, internships provide “hands-on” experience in applying the principles presented in courses. Beyond the highly specialized training associated with on-the-job activities, students can gain insights into their aptitudes, aspirations and work habits that enable them to clarify their academic and career objectives. Professional acquaintances established during internships can continue to serve as important contacts for students after the internship is completed.

Although most internships are part-time (12–15 hours per week) positions in the Riverside area, organizations that host student interns are located throughout the United States, including Washington, D.C. and Sacramento, CA. Students working as interns may receive stipends, hourly wages, or serve as volunteers, depending upon the specific appointment. Up to 16 units of credit toward the bachelor’s degree may be earned by developing an academic component of the internship in consultation with a faculty supervisor and enrolling in ENSC 198-I.

Undergraduate Research

Students interested in enhancing the status of knowledge about environmental processes or seeking new solutions to environmental problems may gain training and experience as part-time employees in the department’s research laboratories and other research facilities, such as the U.S. Salinity Laboratory, located on campus, and the USDA Pacific Southwest Research Station, located on Canyon Crest Drive. Those wishing to conduct their own research under faculty supervision may earn academic credit by enrolling in ENSC 197. Expenses for both laboratory and field experiments are eligible for funding by the campus mini-grant program which supports undergraduate research and creative activity.

California Teach-Science and Mathematics Initiative (CalTeach-SMI)

California Teach-Science and Mathematics Initiative (CalTeach-SMI) has a goal of addressing the critical need of highly qualified K-12 science and mathematics teachers in California. With an economy increasingly reliant on science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) and the anticipated large scale retirement of qualified teachers, this is an essential time to explore and prepare for a career in teaching science or mathematics.

CalTeach-SMI at UCR offers undergraduate students opportunities to explore STEM teaching as a career option. Through CalTeach-SMI, students receive advising and mentoring to prepare for entrance into an intern teaching credential program while diligently coordinating with academic advisors to ensure completion of STEM degree requirements. The CalTeach-SMI

Resource Center provides future STEM teachers opportunities to promote planning and professional development towards a science/mathematics education career.

For more information about the CalTeach-SMI program, please visit smi.ucr.edu, the Resource Center at 1114 Pierce Hall, or on Facebook at facebook.com/ScienceMathInitiativeAtUcr and on Instagram at instagram.com/smiatucr/.

The Environmental Sciences Graduate Program offers the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Environmental Sciences.

Advanced training in Environmental Sciences is becoming increasingly necessary to address complex problems involving natural resources and environmental quality. Although this task frequently requires specialized knowledge in various fields of science, it also requires understanding and integration of a wide variety of interacting physical, chemical, biological, and societal influences. This interaction makes graduate study in environmental sciences distinct from many other scientific fields.

We have designed our program to offer advanced training in a number of specialized field areas within environmental sciences, operating within a single graduate degree program administered by the Department of Environmental Sciences. Students trained in the Environmental Sciences Graduate Program can fill many areas of expertise needed in the state and nation. Potential career opportunities exist at regulatory agencies, consulting firms, government and academic research institutions, and industrial research facilities.

Admission

Entry to the program requires completion of a baccalaureate degree in a field appropriate as preparation for graduate study in environmental sciences. Students normally will come to the program from an environmental sciences related discipline such as atmospheric science, aquatic science, earth science, environmental chemistry, hydrology, or soil science; or a basic science such as biology, chemistry, or physics.

Students may conduct research under the supervision of a sponsoring faculty member in any of the following field areas.

In addition to the following requirements, all applicants must meet the general requirements as set forth in this catalog under the Graduate Studies section.

Atmospheric Sciences

The Atmospheric Sciences field area encompasses diverse topics such as atmospheric chemistry and air quality, health effects of air pollution, drivers of radiative forcing and global warming, remote sensing of the atmosphere, and atmosphere-ocean interactions. Students will receive training in observing, modeling, and understanding atmospheric circulation and the fate of atmospheric chemical species. Much of the research being conducted addresses the societal impacts of air pollution and climate change.

Entrance requirements

There are no entrance requirements for the Atmospheric Sciences area beyond the general requirements for admission to the ESGP. It is recommended that students have completed one year of chemistry, as well as courses in general physics, organic chemistry, calculus through integrals, and statistics. Students who have not completed courses required for their research may need to complete additional courses to remedy deficiencies.

Environmental Chemistry and Ecotoxicology

Course Work

The Ph.D. and M.S. degree programs both require completion of the following courses.

- Each student must complete ENSC 227.
- Each student must complete either ENSC 200 or ENSC 232.
- Each student must complete at least one additional graduate-level, four-unit elective within or outside of the Department of Environmental Sciences. This requirement can also be met by taking an upper division ENSC course concurrently with ENSC 292.

Each student may complete additional upper-division undergraduate courses and/or graduate-level courses depending on the student's field area and research focus.

Students with a M.S. objective may need to take additional courses to fulfill the requirements of the Plan I (Thesis) or Plan II (Comprehensive Examination) options. Upon acceptance to the program, the student will select an Advisory Committee made up of three members of the participating faculty in the ESGP to assist in the planning of the individualized curriculum. Electives are chosen in consultation with the Advisory Committee. Students are encouraged to attend a seminar each quarter (to be chosen in consultation with the major advisor). Students must complete 2 units of ENSC 401 (Professional Development in Environmental Sciences) within their first year of entering the ESGP. There is no foreign language requirement for the program.

Master's Degree

The Department of Environmental Sciences offers the M.S. degree in Environmental Sciences under the Plan I (Thesis) and Plan II (Comprehensive Examination) options. The general requirements for the M.S. degree are found in the Graduate Studies section of the General Catalog. All students are required to give a presentation annually at the Environmental Sciences Graduate Program Student Symposium.

Plan I (Thesis)

Plan I (Thesis) Students must complete a minimum of 36 quarter units of graduate and upper-division undergraduate courses in, or significantly related to, Environmental Sciences. These must include the course requirements given above. At least 24 of the 36 units must be in graduate courses. A maximum of 12 of these units may be in graduate research for the thesis. No more than 4 units of ENSC 290 and 2 units of graduate seminar courses may be applied toward the degree. ### Graduate Program

The program offers the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Environmental Toxicology.

The interdepartmental graduate program in Environmental Toxicology has participating faculty from the departments of Biochemistry, Biomedical Sciences, Botany and Plant Sciences, Molecular, Cell, and Systems Biology, Chemical and Environmental Engineering, Chemistry, Entomology, Electrical and Computer Engineering, Environmental Sciences, Philosophy, and Microbiology and Plant Pathology

The goal of the program is to train toxicologists capable of directing research in areas of environmental toxicology. Areas of specialization include biochemical toxicology and chemical toxicology. To attain this goal, a three-tiered curriculum has been designed whereby students must complete

1. A core of courses in environmental toxicology: ENSC 200/ENTX 200/CHEM 246, ENTX 201, ENTX 201L, ENTX 202, ENTX 270
2. A selection of elective courses in environmental toxicology and other relevant fields chosen in consultation with the student's major professor and the Guidance Committee to develop depth in particular areas of specialization
3. Research training in specific areas of environmental toxicology

The program stresses the importance of innovative and independent laboratory research as the major component of the student's education.

Admission

Students must have a B.A. or B.S. degree from an accredited institution and an academic record that satisfies the minimum admission standards established by the UCR Graduate Division. In addition, students applying to the M.S. and Ph.D. program may submit GRE General Test scores (verbal, quantitative, and analytical), but it is not a requirement. Although no specific undergraduate degree specialization is required, applicants should have adequate backgrounds in the basic physical sciences such as chemistry, physics, and mathematics as well as in the biological sciences.

Course Work

Normally, students admitted to regular standing have satisfied all prerequisite course work. Under special circumstances, students who have not completed all undergraduate requirements may be admitted provided that these deficiencies are corrected early in their graduate studies. Deficiencies must be corrected by taking the appropriate course work if undergraduate or other previous training has not included the following:

- One year of general biology
- One year of general physics
- One year of calculus
- One year of general chemistry
- One year of organic chemistry
- One upper division course in general biochemistry
- One upper division course in molecular biology
- One upper division course in statistics

Students who meet all the undergraduate entrance requirements should be able to complete the core Environmental Toxicology requirements in the first year and most electives by the end of the second year.

Professional Development

Students receive trainings on writing and oral presentation by completing an annual progress report, and giving an oral presentation on their research at the Annual Student Symposium (part of the ENTX 271 course). Students in their fourth year of the program give an oral presentation as part of the ENTX 270 seminar series. They complete Teaching Assistant Training through a workshop offered by Graduate Division. They attend special seminars (part of the ENTX 270) given by speakers from industry, government agencies, or other professions on career and professional development, and other special topics relevant to professional development, including research integrity and lab safety.

Laboratory Rotation

All students participate in laboratory rotation through enrollment in ENTX 201L. Students spend time in one laboratory per quarter familiarizing themselves with research techniques utilized in the laboratory of an Environmental Toxicology faculty member. Rotation laboratories are chosen in consultation with the graduate advisor and individual faculty members. Students may enroll in up to three quarters of laboratory rotation before declaring a major professor. Students who wish to declare a major professor after one quarter are not required to enroll for additional laboratory rotation. The major professor serves as chair of the student's Guidance and Dissertation committees.

Guidance Committee

Each graduate student establishes a guidance committee which participates in the annual student progress evaluation procedure and advises the student on curriculum and research. The committee consists of the major professor plus at least two other faculty, one of whom must be a member of the Environmental Toxicology Program. Each student, in consultation with the major professor, nominates the members of the guidance committee. The committee must be named by the end of the quarter in which the student selects a major professor. The composition of the guidance committee must be approved by the curriculum and student affairs committee.

Master's Degree

The program offers the M.S. degree in Environmental Toxicology.

Students enrolling in the master's degree program must meet the requirements for the Plan I or Plan II of the UCR Graduate Council, and take core courses as described above. Plan I also requires submission of an acceptable thesis and an oral examination as described in details below.

Plan I (Thesis)

Thirty-six (36) units, of which 24 must be in graduate-level courses, are required. No more than 12 units of ENTX 290, ENTX 297, and ENTX 299 may be used to satisfy the unit requirement. All students must enroll in the Environmental Toxicology seminar (ENTX 270 and ENTX 271) each quarter offered, although no more than 3 units from seminar courses can be accrued towards degree credit. A final draft of the thesis is to be given to the thesis committee two weeks before the final oral examination. A final oral examination consists of an open research seminar, presented by the candidate and advertised to all the students and faculty in the Environmental Toxicology Program. Following the seminar, the student is questioned by the guidance committee on the thesis research and on matters related to the general field of the thesis research.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Thirty-six (36) units, of which 18 must be in graduate-level courses, are required. No more than 12 units of ENTX 290 and ENTX 297 may be used to satisfy the unit requirement. All students must enroll in the Environmental Toxicology seminar (ENTX 270 and ENTX 271) each quarter offered. A comprehensive examination is also required, with the content determined and approved by both the Graduate Advisor and the Director of the program.

Normative Time to Degree

6 quarters

Doctoral Degree

The program offers the Ph.D. degree in Environmental Toxicology.

Students must meet general university requirements of the Graduate Division as found in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog.

Course Work

Beyond the required core sequence, all students must enroll in the Environmental Toxicology seminar (ENTX 270 and ENTX 271) each quarter offered and complete a program of courses to be approved by the guidance committee. With the approval of the Graduate Advisor, students defending in spring will be allowed to waive the ENTX 271 registration requirement since this seminar is only offered each spring quarter. All course work schedules are submitted to the graduate advisor for approval. The Ph.D. degree is awarded when the student passes the preliminary and qualifying examinations and demonstrates an ability to do original research by preparation and submission of an acceptable dissertation.

Preliminary Examination

The preliminary examination is a standardized, written test generally offered once a year prior to the beginning of the fall quarter. Students normally take it following the completion of the core curriculum. The examination must be satisfactorily completed in order to enroll for the seventh academic quarter in the Ph.D. program. The examination consists of questions related to environmental, organismal and suborganismal aspects of toxicology. These questions are designed to test the student's ability to synthesize and integrate concepts in toxicology, rather than merely reiterate the material covered in the Environmental Toxicology core curriculum. The examination is administered by a committee consisting of the faculty members involved in teaching the core curriculum. On the basis of the results of this examination, the committee recommends appointment of a faculty qualifying committee, additional course work in specific area(s) of weakness, transfer to a terminal master's program, or withdrawal from the program. In exceptional circumstances, the preliminary examination can be taken a second time.

Oral Qualifying Examination

The qualifying examination is an oral examination conducted by the qualifying committee. The qualifying committee, appointed by the graduate dean from nominations made by the faculty, is composed of the student's major professor and four additional members, one of whom must be from outside the Graduate Environmental Toxicology group. It covers the student's area of specialization and research field as well as general subjects at the discretion of the qualifying committee. The qualifying examination must be successfully completed by the end of the ninth quarter of full-time enrollment in the Ph.D. program. Under exceptional circumstances, the qualifying examination may be taken a second time. Upon successful completion of the qualifying examination, the student is advanced to candidacy.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

A dissertation committee composed of at least three members is appointed by the graduate dean shortly after advancement to candidacy. Students must submit a dissertation based on independent, original research acceptable to all dissertation committee members. A final draft of the dissertation is to be given to the committee two weeks before the dissertation defense seminar.

Before approval of the dissertation, students must present their research orally at a thesis defense seminar. The seminar must be advertised to the campus community and is open to all who wish to attend. Following the seminar, the student is questioned by the dissertation committee on the thesis research and on matters related to the general field of the thesis research.

Oral Qualifying Exam and Final Defense Modality

The student and committee members should be present on campus. Students are encouraged to find committee members who are available to attend in person. If that is not possible, upon approval of the examining committee chair, the exam can be taken in the Hybrid mode. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to be on campus in a video enabled room, with the majority of the committee members being physically present and others remote. The chair of the committee must be physically present for a Hybrid exam.

Committee members nominated from outside the UC Academic Senate who participate remotely must have qualifications comparable to a UC Academic Senate member and submit a letter of intention and CV. In addition, strong academic justification for inclusion on the committee must be provided by the Graduate Advisor.

Teaching Requirement

Ph.D. students in our program are required to fulfill a two-quarter teaching requirement, which is an important training to prepare our students for teaching and research professions. Under special circumstances, and with the approval of the major professor and program advisor, the student can apply to have this requirement waived.

Majors

Ethnic Studies is the systematic, relational and critical study of the social construction of race, racism, and racial or ethnic subordination, and the history, culture, and contemporary experiences of racial or ethnic groups who have not been fully incorporated into U.S. society. Ethnic Studies is the interdisciplinary social and historical study of how different populations have experienced, survived, and critically engaged the United States nation-building project. We analyze the social dynamics of race, racism, and various forms of institutionalized violence, including land conquest, racist state violence, Spanish and Euroamerican colonialisms, U.S. imperialism, systemic sexual violence, racial genocide, chattel slavery, gendered militarization, legalized discrimination (apartheid and segregation), white supremacy, and the internalized logics of gender/racial domination and assimilation. We are especially engaged with the creative historical work of social movements, cultural and artistic productions, legal and public policy activisms, indigenous and liberationist epistemologies, community and identity formation, and radical social and political thought. We examine how these different kinds of resistance, persistence, liberation struggle, and radical knowledge production both confront and transform oppressive conditions and create new possibilities for social change.

Individually and collectively, courses in Ethnic Studies forge strong scholarly and intellectual connections between the related fields of Native American, African American, Chicana/o, and Asian American Studies. Ethnic Studies is committed to scholarly excellence, intellectual rigor, and making critical contributions to global discourses regarding the meaning of human freedom. As part of our pedagogical philosophy, we strive to provide an empowering literacy that expands students' social and political horizons, as well as the creative, critical thinking skills necessary to participate fully in society and the world.

The Department of Ethnic Studies offers majors leading to a B.A. degree in Ethnic Studies, African American Studies, Asian American Studies, Chicano Studies, and Native American Studies. Students may develop either a general emphasis in Ethnic Studies or a concentration on a specific group. The major enables students to study race and ethnicity in comparative perspective, to gain greater multicultural insight and understanding, and to prepare them to enter the workforce and function effectively and critically as informed citizens in a diverse multicultural society.

With the changing ethnic composition of society is a growing demand for individuals in education, government, and the private sector with knowledge and expertise in race and ethnic relations. An Ethnic Studies major also helps to prepare students for graduate or professional school and careers in a number of areas including education, law, human services, organizing and advocacy, social welfare, urban planning, and state and county government.

Master's Degree

The M.A. degree program is designed for students whose goal is to complete the M.A. as their ultimate objective. While completion of the M.A. degree does not lead to automatic admission into the Ph.D. program, successful students may be encouraged to apply to the Ethnic Studies Ph.D. program at UCR or to similar programs at peer campuses. The M.A. program is designed for students who wish to enhance their existing scholarly training and enhance their professional qualifications, or who hope to prepare themselves for admission into a relevant Ph.D. program.

Course Requirements

The core Ethnic Studies M.A. graduate curriculum consists of two theory courses (ETST 200 and 201), and one methodology course (ETST 203). The remainder of each M.A. student's specific curricular program is structured in consultation with his or her assigned faculty mentor. The candidate must complete a minimum of 36 units of course work with a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or better, which include the three core courses and at least 24 additional units in 200-series courses. ### Dissertation and Presentation

Doctoral students who have advanced to candidacy will research and write a dissertation under the guidance of a Dissertation Committee. The dissertation should focus on a specific aspect of the candidate's fields of study, and must conform to the format prescribed by the Graduate Council. After the Dissertation Committee approves the completed dissertation, the candidate must formally present his/her dissertation as part of the Departmental Colloquium series.

Gender and Sexuality Studies Major

The major in Gender and Sexuality Studies is committed to providing undergraduate students with intersectional feminist perspectives on gender and sexuality and to fostering critical feminist and queer research. The major integrates interdisciplinary and transnational approaches to the theorizing and study of gender and sexuality. The major offers a range of courses that facilitate student learning about the diversity of genders and sexualities in the United States and globally.

Majors learn about the history and contemporary structures of cisheteropatriarchy and white supremacy and engage with strategies for resistance. Students completing the major are exposed to a wide range of feminist theories and epistemologies through required core courses and electives. This major educates students to be global citizens who are prepared for future feminist and queer activism, for graduate-level study in gender and sexuality studies, and/or for careers in education, law, non-profit work, public policy, social justice, social work, health care, and related fields. This major also encourages students to participate in internships with local feminist and queer social justice organizations and/or to enrich and enhance their undergraduate experience and learning through study abroad.

The major requirements for the B.A. degree in Gender and Sexuality Studies are as follows:

Major Requirements

1. Lower-division requirements (three courses [at least 12 units])

Closely related upper-division courses from other programs or departments may be substituted upon approval.

Sustainability Studies Major

The Sustainability Studies Bachelor of Science degree offered by the Gender and Sexuality Studies Department offers a comparative, interdisciplinary, transnational approach to the theories and practices of building a sustainable future. Major coursework focuses on a range of social and scientific challenges to sustainability including: climate change, air and water pollution, toxic contamination, energy demands, economic growth, agricultural production, and environmental injustices associated with differences in advantages due to race and ethnicity, socio-economic class, gender, sexuality, religion and ability. Courses in gender and sustainability, cultural studies, policy, media, and social sciences, natural and earth sciences, engineering, and health and medicine prepare students to respond to challenges to local, regional, and global sustainability. Students will be trained in feminist paradigms and methodologies associated with intersectionality, dialogue, and relation. Through in-depth, engaged learning experiences, this major educates global citizens who will be prepared for careers in industry, health care, public service, policy advocacy, education, and social activism relevant to sustainability.

Majors are strongly encouraged to complete internships with local environmental organizations, health advocates, and other institutions as well as to broaden their perspectives through the study abroad program. This major may accommodate CNAS transfers who have considerable amounts of training in science, yet desire an interdisciplinary education in sustainability that recognizes environmental change is gendered.

The minor in Feminist Studies consists of six courses (at least 24 units) distributed as follows:

Established in 1996, UCR's queer studies minor was the first of its kind in the University of California system. The minor reflects current critical, theoretical, and methodological innovations in the study of gender and sexuality and the representation of queerness in art, literature, and media. Queer studies is by nature an interdisciplinary field, and this program is meant to introduce students to new developments in queer studies across multiple disciplines in the College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences. Though the minor is housed in the Department of Gender and Sexuality Studies, over 20 UCR faculty members are affiliated with queer studies and teach the minor's required courses. The curriculum addresses: queer political movements, queer history, the evolution of sexual and gender identities, queer representation, queer perspectives on the arts, queer intersectionalities, and queer theory.

Requirements for the minor (24 units)

1. Lower-division requirements (4 units) chosen from LGBS 001 or GSST 001
2. Upper-division requirements (5 courses [at least 20 units]) chosen from the approved list of courses:

Graduate Program

The Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics Graduate Program (GGB) administers a program leading to the Ph.D. in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics. GGB is an interdepartmental program that includes faculty from the departments of Biochemistry, Botany and Plant Sciences, Computer Science and Engineering, Entomology, Environmental Sciences, Molecular, Cell, and Systems Biology, Nematology, Plant Pathology and Microbiology, and Statistics, as well as the Division of Biomedical Sciences.

The program is structured to allow maximum flexibility in the design of an individual student course program and research goals. A primary objective is to allow students to develop a capability in research as rapidly as possible, consistent with the student's initial preparation.

Students are expected to meet all general requirements of the Graduate Division as printed in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog.

Admission

Applicants with any B.A. or B.S. degree and an adequate background in the biological and/or computational sciences will be considered. The specific entry requirements include courses in genetics, biology, chemistry, calculus, computer science, and statistics. Please refer to the Program Guidelines for details. GGB evaluates applications on a continual basis from October to May, however, it normally considers applications for teaching and research assistantships at the same time as fellowships; therefore, students are strongly encouraged to complete their applications for admission and support as early as possible. Normally, fellowships are awarded in January, for students entering the following fall quarter.

Doctoral Degree

The program offers the Ph.D. degree in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics.

Course Work

The course curriculum consists of three core classes and one or more elective classes. The core curriculum is composed of one genetics, one genomics and one bioinformatics course, while one or more elective classes can be chosen from an area of a student's specialization.

Core Classes (breadth requirements)

Students will take one course from each of the following three areas (A-C).

Seminars

The GEN 261 seminar (Seminar in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics) must be taken every quarter.

Supplemental Courses

Students may wish to take additional courses to supplement their graduate training. These courses will be tailored to the specific student's needs and decided upon in consultation with their major professors.

Classes that emphasize genetics, genomics, bioinformatics and other related areas are given in the List of Potential Courses in the GGB Graduate Student Handbook.

Students should consider some training in the ethics of use of genetically modified organisms, impact of patents on application of bioinformatics/genomics data, and/or use of databases with bioinformatics/genomics information in a clinical setting.

Additional Units taken to maintain 12-unit course load

Graduate students will register for 12 units per quarter to maintain full-time status. These units will include any lecture and seminar courses taken for the quarter. Typically students will also register for Directed Research (GEN 297) prior to advancement to candidacy or Research for Dissertation (GEN 299) after passing the Qualifying Exam.

The Ph.D. is a research degree, and, accordingly, the goal of the program is to train students in the theoretical and experimental foundations of modern genetics. Students are strongly encouraged to participate in lab rotations, select a major professor and begin research work early in their training (during the first year of residence).

Written and Oral Qualifying Examinations

Students are advanced to candidacy following successful completion of a written preliminary examination and an oral qualifying examination.

The Oral Qualifying Exam is expected to be taken in-person with the student and all exam committee members physically present in the same room. Remote exceptions (attendance via video call) can be granted for up to two committee members by the GGB Graduate Advisor. However, at a minimum the student and the chair of the committee are expected to attend in-person. Any exceptions for remote attendance need to be well justified and are not a standard option.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

Successful completion of a final oral dissertation defense is also required.

The Final Defense is expected to be taken in-person with the student and all dissertation committee members physically present in the same location. Remote exceptions (attendance via video call) can be granted for up to two committee members by the GGB Graduate Advisor. Any exceptions for remote attendance need to be well justified and are not a standard option. Defenses are expected to be held in a video enabled room to support remote attendance for a larger audience as well as the committee members that have been approved to attend remotely.

Foreign Language Requirement

None

Teaching Requirement

Each student must have at least two quarters of teaching experience. This requirement may be satisfied by serving as a teaching assistant in a genetics-related course.

Professional Development Training

Ph.D. graduate students fulfill their professional training requirement through enrollment in GEN 261 and GDIV 403.

Normative Time to Degree

15 quarters

Masters Degree

The multidisciplinary interdepartmental graduate program in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics offers instruction and research training leading to the M.S. degree in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics. A Thesis (Plan I) or Comprehensive Exam (Plan II) M.S. degree in Genetics, Genomics, and Bioinformatics is available under special circumstances, when the work leading to the Ph.D. degree cannot be completed. Whether either of these options is appropriate will be decided by the student's Guidance Committee either at the end of the first year or the time of the oral qualifying examination. Reference the Minimum Degree Requirements for the Master's degree (for Plan I and Plan II) in the Graduate Studies section of the General requirements.

Major

Global Studies is designed to be a challenging, interdisciplinary, major that provides students with an understanding of processes and problems that transcend national boundaries. Global Studies majors investigate interconnections that have emerged through global historical processes, transnational mobilities and identities, supranational norms, laws, and institutions, as well as the dissemination of ideas, belief systems, literatures, and arts across borders. Global studies majors also investigate global causes and consequences of division, fragmentation, and conflict.

At UCR, Global Studies majors are expected to master general theoretical and historical literatures on global cultural and economic processes, while pursuing tailored expertise on a specific region or thematic area, such as global health and the spread of disease, human rights and the politics of migration, global arts and media, global economic systems of trade and finance, or sustainability and environmental politics.

HABLAMoS Medical Spanish, Designated Emphasis

School of Medicine

Ann Cheney (Associate Professor SMPPH), Director

Jacqueline Moreira, Program Coordinator

Advisory Committee & Participating Faculty

Nuria Rico, SMPPH

Designated Emphasis Requirements

The Designated Emphasis in Medical Spanish or HABLAMoS (Hispanic and Bilingual Ambulatory Medical Studies) is a four-year language learning program that includes classroom instruction and experiential learning opportunities in Spanish-speaking clinics, communities, and families in Inland Southern California and urban and rural Spanish-speaking clinics. Students of all language levels can join the program in their first or second year of graduate or medical school. Students must complete a minimum of 200 hours of Spanish-language learning spread out across their graduate or medical education to receive the DE in Medical Spanish.

1. Year one: builds the foundation for Spanish-language learning in medical contexts. Students receive one unit of selective credit on their transcript by completing the 17.5 hours for the medical Spanish selective.

Year 1	Total Number of Sessions	Hours/Session	Total Possible Hours
Conversation lunch workshops	5	1	5
Grammar lessons	5	1.5	7.5
Clinic attendance	1	3	3
Modules/OSCEs	4	.5	2
Totals			17.5

2. Year two: strengthens students' language skills and emphasizes oral communication in clinical encounters with Spanish-speaking patients and families. Students participate in a minimum of 14 hours of language learning. This includes 10 hours of case-based learning, taught by native Spanish-speaking physicians, 6 hours of conversational Spanish with community members.

3. Year three: deepens students' medical Spanish vocabulary and cultural humility in the context of caring for Spanish-speaking patients. Students work independently on their written and oral language skills. Activities include 40 hours of independent completion of online language learning models via CanopyLearn, recipient of the National Institutes of Health (NIH) innovation award recipient.

4. Year four: immerses students in Spanish-speaking clinics and families in Inland Southern California and provides experiential learning into the cultural and structural factors that shape the health of Latino patients, patient-provider dynamics, and patient experiences in clinical spaces. Students can select from two activities: clinical rotation: Four-week stay with a Spanish-speaking Latino family, 30-hour weekly clinic rotation with a preceptor with a Spanish-speaking patient panel, 6 hours of online Spanish grammar instruction, 3 hours of virtual classroom discussion, and can opt into a home-stay with a Spanish-speaking family; scholarly activity: 20 hour weekly independent scholarship, 6 hours of structured Spanish language lessons, 3 hours of seminar or reading circles, 4 hours of conversation practice with community members. Both activities include a final required oral presentation in Spanish on a public health topic.

All requirements for the Designated Emphasis must be satisfied no later than one calendar year from the quarter in which candidate advances to candidacy in their PhD field or the final block in undergraduate medical education; a minimum GPA of 3.0 is required for the Designated Emphasis completion.

See college placement examination policy.

Major

The Department of Hispanic Studies offers a B.A. degree in Spanish. It offers the opportunity to double-major in Spanish and any other discipline; and to pursue a Spanish minor. A student may major in Spanish by completing the requirements in one of three areas of specialization, or options.

The Literature Option is intended for students who are interested in learning about the literary culture of Latin America and Spain. Students who choose the Literature Option will become versed in the analysis of writing, fiction, poetry, films, essays and criticism in Spanish, across historical periods and locations. This broad, liberal education prepares majors to pursue advanced graduate study in Latin American or Spanish literature. It prepares them for careers in educational policy, high school teaching, international relations, law, and many other professions.

The Linguistics Option is designed for students who are interested in bilingualism, Heritage Language or in Hispanic Linguistics. Students follow this option as preparation for advanced study in multiple fields -Hispanic Linguistics, Education, Language Science(s)- as preparation for K-12 teaching, or as a second major in fields where bilingualism or being bilingual is useful such as Ethnic Studies, the medical field(s), Sociology, Psychology or Anthropology, among others. We particularly encourage Heritage Language Speakers of Spanish, from any major, to pursue a specialization in Hispanic Linguistics.

The Cultural Studies Option is intended for students with an interest in the intersections of society, power, and culture. It offers an opportunity to acquire critical interdisciplinary skills in cultural analysis from a Hispanic perspective. It explores numerous forms of Spanish, Latin American and transatlantic cultural practices including film, television, philosophy, music, visual arts, performance, literature, testimonials, essays, and cultural critique. The Cultural Studies Option is relevant for students considering graduate study in Spanish, literature generally, history, international relations, or anthropology. It prepares students for careers in high school teaching, media work, advertising, creative arts, multimedia projects, and international studies.

All three options are suitable for double majors in all disciplines. Spanish majors very often double major in the fields of Anthropology, Classics, Comparative Languages and Literatures, Education, English, History, Latin American Studies, Philosophy, Psychology, Linguistics, Media and Cultural Studies, Music, or Sociology.

Education Abroad

The Department of Hispanic Studies encourages participation in Education Abroad. The Department regularly offers Faculty Led Education Abroad Programs (FLEAP) that offer UCR credit while learning abroad during Summer Sessions. Please consult with the faculty leader. UCEAP is another opportunity to learn abroad within the UC system. Spanish majors who choose to participate in UCEAP typically travel to Spain or Latin America to study in cities such as Madrid, or Barcelona, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Rio, San José, Mexico City, etc. Students should plan well in advance to ensure that the courses they take outside of the U.S. fit in your overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog. Consult the Education Abroad office at UC Riverside for additional information on international opportunities.

Graduate Program

The Department of Hispanic Studies offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Spanish.

The graduate program in Spanish prepares scholars for university teaching and research in Spanish and Latin American literature, linguistics, and/or cultural studies. It is organized primarily for students seeking the Ph.D. degree, although the M.A. degree is awarded in the course of a student's progress.

The faculty in Hispanic Studies offers a wide and diverse group of graduate courses in literary, linguistic and cultural studies. Research and teaching interests include all areas of Spanish and Latin American literature from its origins to the present. Faculty also have strong research and teaching profiles in the theory and practices of translation; cultural studies, including Latin American film, gender studies, theories of the body, historiography and fiction; psychoanalysis; bilingualism and heritage language studies; Spanish in the US; sociolinguistics; and philosophy, including aesthetics, philosophies in Latin America and the Caribbean, and contemporary political philosophy.

Admission

The Department of Hispanic Studies invites highly qualified candidates from any discipline to apply. We welcome applicants with degrees (for example) in linguistics, literature (Hispanophone as well as Comparative or other literatures), philosophy, psychology and art history. Candidates will be ranked and selected according to the following criteria: excellent writing skills; creativity and originality; desire to engage with the academic community through professionalization and interdisciplinary research; high academic achievement; willingness to place issues of diversity at core of research project; research experience; and matching of expertise with existing faculty. Faculty will recommend candidates for admission after a careful consideration of submitted materials, including the statement of purpose, the writing sample, the personal and diversity statements, the candidate's previous academic background, and the letters of recommendation.

Teaching Assistantships

Most students in the program are Teaching Assistants in the Department of Hispanic Studies; their normal workload includes language teaching and taking three graduate courses per quarter. Teaching Assistants receive training in language instruction as part of their graduate study and teaching duties.

Professional Development

All students must take the series SPN 301 Teaching Spanish at the College Level (2 credits) and SPN 302 Teaching Practicum (1 to 4 credits) to meet the requirements for teaching and pedagogical training.

Students are also required to take SPN 220 Criticism and Critical Documentation (4 credits), a course on critical approaches to reading that also offers practice in Modern Language Association (MLA) documentation, publishing, and an overview of major professional conferences.

Foreign Language Requirement

In addition to Spanish and English, the candidate must demonstrate a reading knowledge of one other language. The choice of language should be guided by the candidate's research needs and interests and is to be made in consultation with the graduate advisor, prior to completion of the language requirement. This requirement can be fulfilled through a departmental examination of written proficiency conducted at the time of the MA examination, by passing a designated language course (e.g., FREN 009A, FREN 009B, GER 002R), or by alternative certification (such as a diploma from a foreign language institute or an accredited university course).

Master's Degree

The Department of Hispanic Studies offers the M.A. in Spanish.

The M.A. in Spanish is awarded to students in the PhD program who successfully complete the coursework and examination requirements. As part of their preparation in Hispanic literary and cultural studies and linguistics, students are introduced to current debates in cultural studies, literary theory, bilingualism and second language acquisition. Exceptionally, students who do not intend to pursue the PhD may seek a terminal M.A. degree.

Course Work

Students complete 72 graduate units in two years that also include our professional development courses SPN 220 (4 units) and the series SPN 301 (2 units)/SPN 302 (2 units).

Of those 72 units, students must take 48 units in required courses. Students specializing in Linguistics must take at least six courses in that field and four courses in Literature and Cultural Studies. Students specializing in Literature and Cultural Studies must take at least six courses in that field and four courses in Linguistics.

In addition to the following courses in Hispanic Studies, students may fulfill their requirements by taking courses approved by the graduate advisor in different Departments.

The department strongly encourages M.A. students to consult with the graduate advisor to ensure they take courses in a variety of different fields.

Students are required to participate in all scholarly events organized by the department.

M.A. Examination

Near the end of this two-year program, students take an examination, written at home and due 24 hours after it is assigned, followed by a one-hour oral examination administered one or two weeks after the written examination. These M.A. examinations (written and oral) are based on the texts in the M.A. reading list. Please, consult the departmental website for an updated version of the M.A. reading list.

The oral examination will be conducted by a committee nominated by the graduate advisor.

Oral Examination Modality

The M.A. Oral Examination can be taken in one of the following modes: Hybrid, Remote, or In Person. The student and the graduate advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter and if the student's presence on campus is required. The graduate advisor will make the final determination on both questions. A Hybrid mode will be defined when there are at least two persons (committee member or student) physically present on campus. Whether on campus or from a remote location, the student is required to take the exam in a quiet and video enabled room. If students take the exam off campus, they're expected to be only by themselves. At least one of the committee members is expected to be on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. All members are always permitted to be remote. If Remote is chosen, all committee members and student have the option to attend remotely. If In Person is chosen, all are expected to be present on campus.

Portfolio Requirement

Candidates who hold the M.A. from UCR must be recommended by the faculty to continue for the Ph.D. Successful candidates must have completed the portfolio requirement.

At the end of their MA coursework, students must present a portfolio with a writing sample (5000 words research paper) demonstrating the command of the scholarly, critical, and analytical requirements of their fields. The portfolio will also include a statement of purpose describing the intended doctoral research project. The writing sample will typically consist of an expanded version of an essay submitted for a graduate seminar, revised for submission for publication in a scholarly journal.

Normative Time to Degree

M.A. degree is 2 years.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Hispanic Studies offers the Ph.D. in Spanish to train students for academic positions as scholars and teachers, and for alternative academic careers in which research, analysis and writing skills at the doctoral level are most useful. (For instance, in editing, publishing, educational policy, foundation governance, arts administration, and so on.)

The program emphasizes advanced coursework and independent research, culminating in the doctoral dissertation. It is designed to provide in-depth coverage of the student's primary area of study, while also ensuring ample coverage of the broad field of Hispanic Studies.

Admission

Students admitted with the M.A. from other institutions will join the doctoral program directly and take courses as required. Graduate students must always be enrolled in three different courses per term throughout their studies at UCR. Candidates who hold the M.A. from UCR must be recommended by the faculty to continue for the Ph.D. Successful candidates must have completed the portfolio requirement.

Course Work

The Ph.D. program requires a minimum of 24 units beyond the 72 units required for the M.A. As part of the 24 units students are required to take the professional development courses, SPN 220 (4 credits) and the series SPN 301 (2 credits) SPN 302 (2 credits). In practice, doctoral students usually find that more than the minimum is advisable for doctoral training. Once they have completed their qualifying examinations, students can work independently with their dissertation committee members by enrolling in Research for Dissertation courses (SPN 299).

Qualifying Examinations:

Long Paper and Oral Examinations

Students choose two areas of concentration as examination areas. One area is the field of major emphasis; a second area or topic is selected in consultation with the chair of the qualifying committee. The doctoral examination includes the writing of the long paper followed by an oral examination of approximately two to three hours.

As part of their preparation in their major area of specialization, students submit a long paper (12,500 words) under the supervision of their dissertation advisor. The long paper will represent scholarly research and analysis in their chosen field of study. After approval from the dissertation advisor, students will distribute the paper to the faculty members of the qualifying committee.

The oral examination will be scheduled at least one week after submitting the long paper. The oral examination deals with the major and secondary areas and the long paper. In preparation for the oral examination, the qualifying committee will give the doctoral candidate written feedback in form of comments, questions, or prompts that will frame and guide the oral examination.

The long paper and oral examinations are conducted by the qualifying committee nominated by the graduate advisor in consultation with the student and appointed by the graduate dean. Upon the successful completion of the written and oral qualifying examinations, the student is recommended to the graduate dean for advancement to candidacy.

The qualifying committee, usually reduced to three members, typically becomes the dissertation committee.

Qualifying Oral Examination Modality

The Oral Qualifying Examination can be taken in one of the following modes: Hybrid, Remote or In Person. The student and the chair of the qualifying committee will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter and if the student's presence on campus is required. The chair of the qualifying committee will make the final determination on both questions. A Hybrid mode will be defined when there are at least two persons (committee member, chair of the qualifying committee or student) physically present on campus. Whether on campus or from a remote location, the student is required to take the exam in a quiet and video enabled room. If students take the exam off campus, they're expected to be only by themselves. At least one of the committee members is expected to be on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. The chair of the qualifying committee is not required to be physically present. If remote, the chair of the qualifying committee can moderate the discussion or choose to delegate that task to a committee member who is physically present. All members, including external members, are always permitted to be remote. If Remote is chosen, all committee members and student have the option to attend remotely. If In Person is chosen, all are expected to be present on campus.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

Students prepare a dissertation presented as prescribed by the Graduate Division under the direction of the candidate's dissertation committee. After completion of the dissertation, the candidate is examined by the dissertation committee. This examination (or final defense) normally takes the form of a public presentation by the candidate followed by questions from the committee.

Final Oral Examination Modality

The Final Defense can be taken in one of the following modes: Hybrid or Remote. The student and the chair of the dissertation committee will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter and if the student's presence on campus is required. The chair of the dissertation committee will make the final determination on both questions. A Hybrid mode will be defined when there are at least two persons (committee member, dissertation chair or student) physically present on campus. Whether on campus or from a remote location, the student is required to take the exam in a quiet and video enabled room. If students take the exam off campus, they're expected to be only by themselves. At least one of the committee members is expected to be on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. The chair of the dissertation committee is not required to be physically present. If remote, the chair of the dissertation committee can moderate the discussion or choose to delegate that task to a committee member who is physically present. All members, including external members, are always permitted to be remote. If Remote is chosen, all committee members and student have the option to attend remotely.

Majors

History plays a central role in general education for all undergraduate students. History stresses an understanding of changes that take place in society over time. It also provides a meaning to the past that has many implications for the future. Through the study of history, we can greatly broaden our learning by understanding the experience of others, removed in time and distant in space from our immediate world. The study of history is as useful as it is fascinating. History majors develop an ability to communicate well, both orally and in writing, and the capacity to think clearly and analytically. Whatever one's goals, history is an important component of any degree program.

History/Administrative Studies Major

The History/Administrative Studies major is designed to combine the discipline of History, with its emphasis on changes in society over time, with the study of administrative behavior, the development of public policy, and the tools of decision making. The addition of an Administrative Studies component provides History majors with analytical administrative skills as well as familiarity with the theories and policies of public administration. The concepts of organizational behavior and decision making, when combined with the perspectives provided through the History major, ought to be of particular value to those planning to enter careers in business; federal, state, or local levels of public or private administration; government work or to those planning to attend a professional school of administration or to those utilizing the major in a variety of positions in the public or private sector. (See also the Public History Program, which outlines public sector careers in History.)

History/Law and Society Major

The History/Law and Society major is designed to offer students the opportunity to combine the study of history, with its emphasis on changes over time in society, politics, the economy, and culture, with the study of legal and law-like relationships and institutions. The coherent series of courses included in this major ought to be of particular value to those intending to study law or to enter other graduate fields as well as to those planning professional careers in government, public administration, business, or other areas where the relationship between history and the law is of significance.

Career Opportunities

Many students planning graduate work find history an excellent preparation for professional schools such as law and business administration. For those planning a legal career, a strong background in Western institutions and values can be obtained in a variety of courses in the department. And, of course, a major in history prepares the student for graduate study in this field as well as a broad range of general careers in business, government work and foreign affairs that ask for written and verbal skills developed in the major.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences, Colleges and Programs section.

Major Requirements

The History Department offers the B.A. degree in History, History/Administrative Studies, and History/Law and Society. Students seeking deeper engagement in research may choose the 'With Distinction' option described below.

To provide intellectual focus as each student proceeds through the major, the department offers a number of content pathways, geographical and thematic. Each History major is urged to consult regularly with faculty and staff academic advisors for assistance in selecting courses that will conform to one of the pathways.

No later than 2 quarters after earning upper division class standing, each major must receive the Undergraduate Advisor's approval for a Student Pathway Plan through the major, developed in consultation with members of the Undergraduate Advising Committee and with faculty mentors. Individual Student Pathway Plans should identify a primary pathway that the student will focus on, and should also address the diversity of human historical experiences by including courses in at least two historical fields, regions, or eras. While normally based on the pathways offered by the department, individual Student Pathway Plans may be customized to take account of student interests, course availability, and faculty specializations.

Change of Major

Students switching to the History Major must have completed two History courses with a grade of "C" or better. Students switching to the History/Administrative Studies, or the History/Law and Society Major must have completed three History courses with a grade of "C" or better. Advanced Placement units earned can be applied towards one course when determining major change eligibility.

Recommended Prelaw Courses

The History major has long been considered as an ideal major for students planning to study law since it meets the three goals that law schools recommend for undergraduate applicants:

1. That they achieve an understanding of the development of social, political, and economic institutions
2. That they develop an ability to communicate well, both orally and in writing
3. That they possess the capacity to think clearly and analytically.

The History Department especially recommends the following upper-division courses to prelaw students:

- HISE 150 (Ancient/Medieval England)
- HISE 153 (History of the Common Law)
- HISA 120A, HISA 120B (The Supreme Court and the Constitution)

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of History offers the M.A. and the Ph.D. in History. Students may choose a concentration in Public History in conjunction with the M.A. in History or as a field for the Ph.D. in History.

Admission

Committee in Charge

John Laursen (Political Science)
Erich Reck (Philosophy)
Daryle Williams, Dean, ex officio

Major

The Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences major is an interdisciplinary major designed for students who have specific interests that cannot be accommodated within any one of the departments in the College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences and who wish to construct a coherent program of their own. The Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences major is not intended for students whose interests are undecided; students proposing a Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences major must propose a specifically focused interdisciplinary topic or a two-field area. Such students must have a faculty advisor who is a member of the UCR Academic Senate.

The Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences major is fulfilled by a course of studies determined in consultation with an advisor and with the full approval of the chair and three members of the committee overseeing the major. The student may construct either an interdisciplinary option or a two-field option for the major as described below.

Admission

Students who wish to select a Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences major must fill out a form and submit a carefully worded statement of purpose showing meaningful course interrelations. The Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences Interdisciplinary Committee considers each proposal in the context of the student's topic and statement of purpose.

Students whose proposals are being approved should petition for a change in major only after they have been informed of the committee's approval of their interdisciplinary program. Every subsequent change in the student's initial program must be approved by the advisor; a record of the program and of program changes is kept in the student's files.

Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences courses are supervised by the committee and are open to major as well as nonmajor students.

Interdisciplinary Option

The interdisciplinary option is built around a central concept in humanities and social sciences. The concept might be a specific culture, country or ethnic group such as Italian civilization and culture; an age or period such as the Renaissance or the industrial revolution; a great social issue or human problem such as war, revolution, communication; or any other topic which receives significant attention from several disciplines.

Two-Field Option

In special circumstances the committee sponsors a two-field option for the major designed to allow students to combine studies in two disciplines. Such majors are approved only if they cannot be accommodated within a dual major or within the Liberal Studies Program.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences, Colleges and Programs section.

Labor studies is an interdisciplinary minor that focuses on the conditions, activities, and struggles of workers and other members of the working class from an international, contemporary, comparative and historical perspective. Although trade unions are the primary focus, students will also examine other forms of working class organizing, including community organizing, and organizing by women and people of color. Courses focus on work in formal workplaces, including service, industrial, clerical, professional, and managerial work, and may also address other forms of work, such as unpaid housework, prison labor, or work in the informal economy. The minor addresses issues affecting workers, including governmental policies, technological change, globalization, neoliberalism, and alternative models for organizing for social justice. In addition to taking academic courses, students gain hands-on experience through a one-quarter internship with a union or related organization. This minor helps to prepare students for careers in labor and community organizing, labor law, or labor regulatory agencies.

Requirements for labor studies minor are as follows:

1. Five courses (at least 20 units) from the approved list of courses
2. One of the following 'core' courses: LABR 001, HISA 124, ETST 102, SOC 112, SOC 135, GSST 101, POSC 138
3. A labor internship course (at least 4 units or the equivalent) completed through the following course: LABR 198-I

Major

Latin American Studies is an interdisciplinary, area studies major that allows students to combine insights from many related disciplines. The interdisciplinary focus permits students to study the anthropology, economics, geography, history, sociology, languages and cultures of the region to gain a broad understanding of a complex world area.

The Latin American Studies major provides great flexibility to explore a wide range of subjects of particular interest—from religious cults in the Caribbean to indigenous video in the Andes or the dynamics of agrarian reform in rural Mexico.

The flexibility of the major allows the possibility of completing a double major with other departments such as History, Anthropology, or Political Science.

UCR has a strong faculty in Latin American Studies, with more than 45 members drawn from departments across the campus. More than 125 courses taught at UCR have a significant focus on the region. The strength and breadth of the offerings at UCR permit each student to specialize in the particular country or discipline of greatest interest. Students have many opportunities to get involved in research projects with Latin American Studies professors. Students are encouraged to spend time living and studying in Latin America through, for example, Education Abroad.

Career Opportunities

The Latin American Studies major presents numerous opportunities after graduation. The interdisciplinary nature of the program prepares the student for further study in any number of academic fields at the graduate level, including anthropology, geography, history, sociology, Spanish and Portuguese, law, and journalism.

The B.A. degree itself is valuable preparation for many careers, including the U.S. foreign service, nongovernmental development and aid organizations, international organizations, large overseas corporations, banking, foreign missions, journalism and the media, and teaching.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences, Colleges and Programs section.

First, students must take Introduction to Latin American Studies (LNST 001) and satisfy a language requirement in either Spanish or Portuguese. Second, students choose three disciplinary areas in which to focus their upper-division work. They must take a total of 24 required units in these three areas. Finally, students take an additional 12 units of elective courses in Latin American Studies. Latin American Studies students are encouraged to take additional coursework at the lower and upper division levels.

Graduate Program

The Ph.D. Designated Emphasis (DE) in Latin American Studies fosters communication, collaboration, and exchange with scholars across many departments within the university, and at the national and international levels. Our faculty are active researchers in the social sciences, humanities and natural sciences. Students pursuing the D.E. will benefit from the prominence of the faculty combined with a range of courses and research opportunities.

Requirements

The Designated Emphasis is a rigorous course of study requiring students to demonstrate focused coursework and research in the field with three core requirements:

1. The program requires the completion of 4 graduate courses or 16 units (with at least one of these courses emphasizing U.S.-Latino experience and at least two with a primary axis of Mexico, Central American, South America, or the Caribbean). These courses must be taken in at least two different department and will be selected from the list below. Courses used to satisfy departmental Ph.D. requirements may not be applied to the D.E. (although courses taken within the student's home department not required for the Ph.D. may be applied). The GPA for coursework cannot be below a 3.0.
2. The program also requires the submission of a research portfolio within one year after the quarter in which the student files for candidacy. The portfolio, to be reviewed by a standing committee of LAS faculty, will demonstrate significant research in the field, include two research papers and syllabi from the four courses accompanied by an introductory self-statement (of no more than 1000 words) articulating the particular research emphasis and its depth and breadth of engagement with the field along with an explanation of specific expertise and emphases.
3. Finally, the program requires language certification through examination or coursework in a Latin American language: Spanish, Portuguese, Kreyol, or an indigenous language. Evidence of language certification must be included in the research portfolio (passing of a written translation exam, a full length (15pp+) research paper written in the language, or two or more years of language courses at the college or university level).

Lower-Division Courses

Major

The Law and Society major is open to undergraduate students with junior standing who have completed LWSO 100 with a grade of "C" or higher. The major offers an interdisciplinary liberal arts approach to the study of legal and law-like relationships and institutions. The program combines the perspectives of various disciplines in the Humanities and Social Sciences. The multidisciplinary approach introduces students to a wider range of views about law than is generally possible within a single department, provides a coherent and rigorous program of courses organized around the theme of law and law-like relationships, and allows students to develop critical thinking about law and social institutions.

For students not planning to pursue graduate studies, this program offers a means of understanding some complex relationships between social institutions. For those who plan to pursue graduate studies, the breadth of course work should provide a sound basis for graduate studies in areas related to law: history, philosophy, political science, and sociology, among others. And for students who choose to pursue the study of law in a professional school of law, the curriculum can offer a sound background.

Students may select Law and Society as a major with the departments of Anthropology, Economics, History, Philosophy, Political Science, Psychology, and Sociology.

Graduate Programs

The A. Gary Anderson Graduate School of Management offers a variety of programs leading to the M.B.A. (Master of Business Administration) degree. These include a two-year, full-time M.B.A. program, and a Professional M.B.A. (PMBA) program, which may be completed in 27- 33 months. AGSM also offers a Master of Professional Accountancy (M.P.Ac.) and a Master of Finance (M.Fin.). The Ph.D. Program in Business Administration offers the Doctor of Philosophy Degree (Ph.D.). In limited circumstances, students in the Ph.D. Program may be awarded a degree (the Master of Arts (M.A.) in Management should they fail to complete their doctoral studies.

Master of Business Administration

Applications for the full-time M.B.A. program are accepted for fall, winter, and spring entry. The program is open to eligible students from all undergraduate majors. Quantitative methods (business calculus, statistics, and linear algebra) is a prerequisite to the program. Qualified students who have not taken this prerequisite course may be admitted, but must meet this requirement during their first two quarters in residence.

Admission to the full-time MBA program is made based on a holistic assessment of the applicant's background and achievements, including academic preparedness (mandatory undergraduate GPA and optional GMAT/GRE scores), professional and/or academic experiences including extra-curricular activities, recommenders' opinions and supporting evidence, written and oral communication, leadership potential, overcoming adversity and contributions to diversity.

Although submitting GMAT/GRE score is optional, a superior GMAT/GRE score may help offset weakness in other evidence of academic preparation and can enhance funding considerations. Not submitting GMAT/GRE score does not reduce an applicant's chances of being admitted if their GPA is 3.0 or better.

Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System.

All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application or in the General UCR catalog.

Masters of Business Administration Course Work

The M.B.A. program can be completed in two years on a full-time basis or in three to four years on a part-time basis. In the 80-unit program (20 courses), all students take 36 units in a common body of knowledge that consists of courses in quantitative analysis, managerial economics, financial accounting, finance, operations and management science, information systems, organizational behavior and theory, strategic management, and marketing management. Thereafter, students complete a required internship, 28-36 units selected from electives, a management synthesis course, and a thesis or an industry-based case project (in the management synthesis class MGT 238).

Electives are selected with the assistance of a faculty advisor to meet individual educational and career goals. Electives are offered in areas such as accounting, entrepreneurial management, finance, human resources management, international management, management science, management information systems, marketing, and production and operations management. The program is flexible to meet individual student interests, and students are also encouraged to take courses in related disciplines such as economics, statistics, computer science, and sociology.

Prerequisite Requirement:

Students without a quantitative background are required to complete a quantitative review. This can be done through an external quantitative review or through completion of MGT 403: Review of Quantitative Methods for Management. If students choose to do the external review, this must be completed prior to, and no later than one week before their MBA program begins. AGSM will provide recommendations for external review programs at the point of admission.

Choosing a concentration is optional. Students who chose to specialize in a second concentration has to take 40 units of electives courses. They have to complete additional 4 units beyond the 36 units required for graduation.

Masters of Business Administration

Candidates for the M.B.A. are required to complete all the general requirements specified in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog.

The program conforms to Plan I or Plan II.

Plan I (Thesis)

For thesis work, a maximum of 8 units of credit is granted. The thesis is a two or more quarter research endeavor to be initiated during a student's final year in the program. It is expected that most students will develop theses related to advanced work in their electives. The format and other details of the thesis must meet the requirements of the Graduate Division of UCR.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Students who elect Plan II must complete an industry-based group case analysis as part of the management synthesis course. This case serves in lieu of a comprehensive final examination. Students whose case analyses are deemed "not acceptable" are given one additional quarter to revise them to an "acceptable" level.

Professional M.B.A.

The Professional M.B.A. program provides an M.B.A. experience tailored according to one's schedule. It allows flexibility and convenience in attaining one of the most sought-after degrees. The Professional M.B.A. is the program of choice for a broad swath of students. Among them might be full-time students who want to earn an M.B.A. on a fast track or who seek to take longer with their studies, international students looking for an M.B.A. at a top university, working professionals seeking a graduate degree without interrupting their careers, or individuals who need to accommodate responsibilities at home and with family as they pursue their academic goals.

Professional Master of Business Administration Program (Professional M.B.A.) Track-1

The Professional M.B.A. program Track-1 (or PMBA) provides emerging managers an opportunity to earn an M.B.A. degree with minimal disruption to their professional lives. The PMBA Track 1 curriculum matches the Full Time MBA curriculum, but students have the option to attend classes on weeknights and weekends during the program. Additionally, students in the PMBA Track 1 program are exempt from MGT 402.

The Professional M.B.A. program admits new students for enrollment in fall, winter, or spring.

Further information may be obtained by contacting the University of California, Riverside, Professional M.B.A. Program Office.

Students interested in pursuing the PMBA degree must have earned a BA, or its equivalent, with training comparable to that provided by the University of California. Evaluation of the applicant's file for admission to the Professional M.B.A. degree program is similar to that of the full-time M.B.A. program and will consist of an integrated assessment of all materials (test scores, transcripts of previous academic work, essays, and letter(s) of recommendation).

No specific undergraduate major or course work is required for admission, though preparation in quantitative methods (such as calculus and statistics) is strongly encouraged. Students who do not have adequate quantitative preparation at the time of admission will need to complete preparatory coursework in mathematics in addition to the courses required for the degree.

Admission to the PMBA program is made based on a holistic assessment of the applicant's background and achievements, including academic preparedness (mandatory undergraduate GPA and optional GMAT/GRE scores), professional and/or academic experiences including extra-curricular activities, recommenders' opinions and supporting evidence, written and oral communication, leadership potential, overcoming adversity and contributions to diversity.

Although submitting GMAT/GRE score is optional, a superior GMAT/GRE score may help offset weakness in other evidence of academic preparation and can enhance funding considerations. Not submitting GMAT/GRE score does not reduce an applicant's chances of being admitted if their GPA is 3.0 or better.

Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System.

Applicants must submit at least one letter of recommendation from individuals who can attest to their professional and leadership skills and to their potential for business leadership.

All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application or in the General UCR catalog.

Increasingly large amounts of data are available about customers, costs, and suppliers, which can be analyzed to improve operations, increase the yield on marketing programs and understand pricing and financing better, which all add to the value of the business.

The MSBA interdepartmental program is offered by the School of Business and the Department of Statistics. Depending on the curriculum track, the degree requires 48 to 49 units of study, which can be done as a full-time one-academic-year program or over a longer period on a part-time basis.

Admission

To ensure that students have the prior knowledge to succeed in the program, admission is limited to applicants who have studied statistics or another quantitative discipline such as mathematics, physics, engineering, computer science, or economics or a quantitative business discipline (such as operations, finance and marketing) as undergraduates. Applicants to the program must have completed a bachelor's degree or its approved equivalent in one of the above disciplines. ### Course Work

Once admitted, students follow one of three tracks:

- Statistics Academic Track (48 units)
- Business Academic Track (48 units)
- Practicum Track (49 units)

The statistics academic track and the business academic track offer alternative academic preparation pathways. The practicum track augments either of those academic tracks with a one-unit internship. The statistics academic track is for students who studied a quantitative discipline other than statistics or one of the business disciplines as undergraduates (finance, operations, or marketing) and the business academic track is for students who focused on statistics as undergraduates. Students opting for the third practicum track will follow either the statistics or the business track depending on their academic background as described above, and in addition, are required to undertake an internship (MGT 298I – 1 unit) to fulfill track requirements. All tracks culminate in a two-quarter capstone class that applies their understanding of business analytics to a project.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

The M.A. Degree, Plan II, requires the approval of the Graduate Advisor and is only available to doctoral students who are not continuing in the Ph.D. program. In addition, it requires completion of a minimum of 36 units of approved graduate-level course work and passing the comprehensive examination at least at the M.A. level. The comprehensive examination will be prepared and administered by the Graduate Examination Committee. The comprehensive examination will cover a broad range of topics chosen from the core research, major field, and elective graduate courses taken by the student in their first two years of study. Students must be in residence for 3 quarters.

UCR will not award M.A. degrees to students already possessing an M.A. in Management.

Required/Elective Courses & Required Research

Required Field Seminars

Ph.D. students are required to complete field seminars in their major field area. The requirements for each area are as follows:

1. Accounting

Students are required to take three courses from among MGT293E-Z.

2. Finance

Complete the following five courses: MGT 295F-G, MGT 295I, MGT 295K and MGT 295M.

3. Marketing

Complete the following three courses: MGT 288A-B, and complete either MGT 288C or MGT 288D.

4. Operations

Students are required to complete three courses from among MGT 296E-Z.

5. Management

Complete the following four courses: MGT 289A-D.

Other Research Courses

It is important that Ph.D. students develop a deep understanding of a basic discipline related to their major field area. Thus, students are required to complete other graduate-level courses (200 level or higher). The requirements are as follows:

1. Accounting

Students are required to take three other courses from a department outside of the School of Business. This leaves five electives for the students to choose, which typically include finance courses in 295F-M.

2. Finance

Students are required to take ECON200A-C and two electives.

3. Marketing

Students are required to take three courses from a department outside of the School of Business. This leaves four elective courses for students to choose.

4. Operations

Students are required to take seven other graduate-level courses (200 level or higher). The following courses are highly recommended: MATH 217, MATH 209A-C, MATH 228, STAT 203A-B, STAT 205, STAT 206, STAT 207, STAT 210A-B, STAT 215 ECON 244, ECON 283J, ECON 283N, ECON 283Q, EE 231.

5. Management

Students are required to take three courses from a department outside of the School of Business. This leaves four elective courses for students to choose.

Field Colloquium

It is essential that Ph.D. students actively participate in the intellectual life of the school. In particular, students are expected to attend research presentations of visiting scholars. To facilitate this, field colloquia (MGT 285) will be offered each quarter. Ph.D. students in Marketing and Management are required to take the field colloquium each quarter for course credit until they advance to Ph.D. candidacy. MGT 285 does not count as an elective in the Other Courses listed above.

First Year Research Paper

Ph.D. students must complete an original research paper at a level consistent with the quality of a rigorous Ph.D. program during their first year. The student works with the area faculty to develop the research topic, set expectations, and provide feedback. A committee consisting of the program faculty evaluates the submitted paper. Students whose paper is deemed substandard by the area faculty may be terminated from the Ph.D. program.

Professional Development Course

In order to ensure that doctoral students are prepared to enter future careers as researchers and are able to communicate their work to other researchers, students are required to take a professional development course (MGT 402). MGT 402 does not count as an elective in the Other Courses listed above.

Comprehensive Examination

The comprehensive examination serves as both a major field examination, as well as an examination of topics covered in core research courses. Subsequent to the comprehensive examination a committee of the relevant area faculty will issue a grade of passing at the Ph.D. level, passing at the M.A. level, or failing. If, in the first attempt, a student fails the comprehensive examination or passes at the M.A. level, he or she may be allowed to retake the examination. No more than two attempts to pass this exam are allowed. Students who pass only at the M.A. level may be recommended for a Master's Degree (if they do not already hold an M.A. in Management). The comprehensive exam must be taken no later than the end of the seventh quarter. Additional requirements for each concentration are as follows:

1. Accounting, Finance and Operations

The comprehensive exam contains two parts. Students first take a written part and receive a grade as outlined above. If they pass at the Ph.D. level, then they are required to take an oral exam. The grading scheme is the same for both parts, as are the rules for retakes. The written exam must be taken by the end of the seventh quarter, while the oral exam must be taken no later than the end of the eighth quarter.

2. Marketing and Management

There are no additional requirements.

Qualifying Examination (Dissertation Proposal Defense)

When all requirements are completed, students take their oral qualifying exam, which is a defense of the dissertation proposal. Conducted by the Ph.D. Qualifying Committee, the exam is based upon the student's dissertation proposal, and includes a broad inquiry into the student's preparedness to conduct research and provides an opportunity to discuss the proposed dissertation. After completing the oral qualifying examination and all course requirements successfully, the student is formally advanced to candidacy.

The Qualifying Examination can be completed in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination. If In-Person is chosen, the student and the entire committee must be physically present on campus for the Qualifying Examination. If Hybrid is chosen, the student and the chair of the committee must be physically present on campus for the Qualifying Examination in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. Every effort should be made by the committee members to attend the Qualifying Examination in person, even if Hybrid is chosen.

Final Examination (Dissertation Defense)

A candidate for the degree of Ph.D. may be asked to defend his or her dissertation in a public, oral presentation at a time announced to members of the University community. Upon the candidate's successful defense of the dissertation, the Ph.D. Dissertation Committee will make a recommendation to the Graduate Division that the Ph.D. degree be conferred.

The Final Examination can be completed in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination. If In-Person is chosen, the student and the entire committee must be physically present on campus for the Final Examination. If Hybrid is chosen, the student and the chair of the committee must be physically present on campus for the Final Examination in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. Every effort should be made by the committee members to attend the Final Examination in person, even if Hybrid is chosen.

Dissertation

The dissertation culminates the student's academic endeavors. Of substantial magnitude, the dissertation should make a significant contribution to the advancement of knowledge in the chosen field of study. The dissertation must be filed with the Graduate Division according to their formatting requirements.

Master of Science

The Program of Materials Science and Engineering offers the M.S. degree in Materials Science and Engineering. Students may obtain an M.S. degree in Materials Science and Engineering through one of two plans: 1) Thesis or 2) Comprehensive Examination.

Plan I (Thesis)

Students must complete 36 units of graduate or upper-division undergraduate course work, of which 24 must be graduate level units. Student must complete at least one course from 3 of the 5 areas of Materials Science and Engineering (MSE 201-209, 210-219, 220-229, 230-239, 240-249) as well as at least one unit of MSE 200 and at least five units of MSE 250. Students must enroll in MSE 200 the first time it is offered during their residency. At least two units of MSE 250-259 must be taken for a letter grade. Students can take a maximum of 12 units in Graduate Research and a maximum 6 units in Directed Studies. The course of study needs to be approved each quarter by the research advisor (when determined) and the MSE graduate advisor. The degree will be awarded when all these requirements are met and the thesis has been submitted successfully.

Plan II (Comprehensive Exam)

All students must complete 36 units of graduate or upper division undergraduate courses, of which 18 units must be graduate level. Student must complete at least one course from each of the 5 areas of Materials Science and Engineering (MSE 201-209, 210-219, 220-229, 230-39, 240-249) as well as at least one unit of MSE 200 and at least four units of MSE 250. At least one unit of MSE 250-259 must be taken for a letter grade. None may be in graduate research (MSE 297 or MSE 299). A maximum of 6 units may be in Directed Studies. Students must enroll in MSE 200 the first time it is offered during their residency. The course of study needs to be approved each quarter by the MSE graduate advisor.

Students will take a written comprehensive examination conducted jointly with the Ph.D. preliminary examination. The examination emphasizes the fundamental knowledge of the study area rather than the specifics covered in individual courses.

Students concurrently enrolled in a Ph.D. program in another department must have their course of study approved by the Graduate Advisor. Coursework used to complete requirements in a non-MSE Ph.D. program cannot be used towards the Master's degree in MSE. An Oral Comprehensive Examination that measures the student's breadth of knowledge in Materials Science and Engineering will be given after the appropriate course of study has been completed.

Normative Time to Degree

Six quarters (two years)

Doctoral Degree

The Program of Materials Science and Engineering offers the Ph.D. degree in Materials Science and Engineering.

Admission

In addition to the requirements set forth for a M.S. degree, applicants should demonstrate exceptional achievement that clearly indicates their ability to conduct Ph.D. level studies.

Course Work

There is no comprehensive course requirement for the Ph.D. degree; only a few courses are mandatory. The faculty recommends that the student take a minimum of 36 units of graduate or upper-division undergraduate course work covering all five areas of study in Materials Science and Engineering: Thermodynamic Foundation of Materials, Crystal Structure and Bonding, Materials Characterization Techniques, Functional Materials, and Materials Synthesis and Processing (MSE 201-MSE 209, MSE 210-MSE 219, MSE 220-MSE 229, MSE 230-MSE 239, MSE 240-MSE 249). Students must enroll in MSE 200 the first time it is offered during their residency. Students must enroll in MSE 250 during all quarters of residency and must obtain a letter grade in an MSE 250-MSE 259 course once during each academic year of residency except for the first one.

The courses may include graduate course work used for the M.S. degree. The course of study needs to be approved each quarter by the research advisor (when determined) and the MSE graduate advisor. Students may need to take considerably more than the courses indicated above to prepare for and conduct their Ph.D. research.

Preliminary Examination

The purpose of the preliminary examination is to screen candidates for continuation in the doctoral program. The examination is administered by the graduate program committee jointly with the M.S. comprehensive examination. Candidates must solve at least one problem in each of the five areas of study in Material Science and Engineering. Plan II M.S. candidates who took the combined M.S. comprehensive and Ph.D. preliminary examination and successfully passed at the Ph.D. level are given credit for having passed the Ph.D. preliminary examination.

Dissertation Proposal and Oral Qualifying Examination

After passing the preliminary examination at the Ph.D. level, doctoral candidates must prepare and submit a dissertation proposal to their qualifying examination committee at least one month before the qualifying examination. The format of the proposal is flexible, but the proposal should clearly indicate the proposed problem under study, demonstrate substantial knowledge of the topic and related issues, state the progress made towards a solution, and indicate the work remaining to be done. The new approaches and methods to be used in the research should also be discussed. An extensive bibliography for the problem under study should be attached to the proposal. Within one week after submission, the student is informed whether the proposal meets these standards and the student is permitted to proceed to the oral exam.

The oral qualifying examination focuses on the dissertation problem. It includes considerable depth in the student's area of specialization, as required for a successful completion of the dissertation. The examination is a three-hour session, which begins with the student's presentation of the dissertation topic and is followed with questions and suggestions by the doctoral committee.

Dissertation Examination and Defense

A doctoral dissertation should be an original and substantial contribution to knowledge in the student's major field. The dissertation must demonstrate the student's ability to carry out a program of independent advanced research and to report the results in accordance with standards observed in recognized scientific journals. When the doctoral committee determines that a suitable draft of the dissertation has been presented, a dissertation examination and defense for the student is scheduled. The defense consists of a public seminar followed by questions from the committee members and the audience.

Normative Time to Degree

12 quarters (15 quarters for students without an M.S. in Materials Science and Engineering)

Preparation for Careers in Teaching

All doctoral students are encouraged to serve as teaching assistants for at least three quarters during their graduate career. The program offers a Teaching Practicum in Materials Science and Engineering (MSE 302).

Major

The Department of Mathematics offers a B.A. and B.S. degree in programs that share a common, solid mathematical foundation but differ in their specializations in the pure and applied areas of mathematics. These programs can provide the basis for careers in mathematics itself or within the many scientific and business fields, which, in today's technological society, depend on a basic knowledge of mathematical methods.

The B.A. in Mathematics, following the liberal arts tradition, combines a broad coverage of the humanities and social sciences with a moderate amount of advanced mathematics in the major. It is selected most often either by students who intend to obtain a teaching credential with a specialty in mathematics or by students who wish to pursue graduate work in business or the social sciences.

The B.S. in Mathematics is more technical and contains a greater concentration of work in the major field. The Pure Mathematics program is directed toward students who may wish to pursue graduate work in pure mathematics. The General Applied Math option is directed toward students who may wish to pursue graduate work in applied mathematics.

The other Applied Mathematics programs, with options in Biology, Chemistry, Economics, Environmental Sciences, Physics, and Statistics, are designed to provide a rigorous training in mathematics together with a substantial background in the discipline of the option. The Computational Mathematics program is designed to prepare the student for professional work with computers and computer systems and for graduate work in computer science.

The B.S. in Mathematics for Secondary Teachers is intended for students planning to pursue a career in secondary education. Its courses cover the high school curriculum from an advanced perspective. Students are required to complete mathematics education and education courses in order to facilitate presence in the classroom early in their undergraduate career and to better prepare them for entry in a credential program.

Academic Advising

Each Mathematics major is assigned a faculty advisor who assists the student in formulating educational goals and monitors the student's subsequent progress in an academic program. Each quarter a study list must be approved by this advisor. Advising for all math majors is conducted by the CNAS Academic Advising Center in 1223 Pierce Hall.

Teaching Credential

Teachers in the public schools in California must have a credential approved by the State Commission on Teacher Credentialing. The credential requires an undergraduate major, baccalaureate degree, and completion of a graduate credential program such as that offered by the School of Education at UCR (see Education in this catalog). The Bachelor of Science in Mathematics for Secondary Teachers assists students in their preparation to face the challenges of a credentialing program.

Before admission and student teaching in a graduate credential program, the candidate must pass the California Basic Education Skills Test (CBEST) and demonstrate subject-matter proficiency in the fields which the candidate will teach. The candidate can demonstrate proficiency either by passing the commission's subject-matter assessment examination or completing an undergraduate program that is state approved for teacher preparation.

California Teach-Science and Mathematics Initiative (CalTeach-SMI)

California Teach-Science and Mathematics Initiative (CalTeach-SMI) has a goal of addressing the critical need of highly qualified K-12 science and mathematics teachers in California. With an economy increasingly reliant on science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) and the anticipated large scale retirement of qualified teachers, this is an essential time to explore and prepare for a career in teaching science or mathematics.

CalTeach-SMI at UCR offers undergraduate students paid/unpaid opportunities, such as the Scholar Apprentice Program, to explore STEM teaching as a career option. Through CalTeach-SMI, students receive advising and mentoring to prepare for entrance into an intern teaching credential program while diligently coordinating with academic advisors to ensure completion of STEM degree requirements. The CalTeach-SMI Resource Center provides future STEM teachers with material and financial resources which includes the National Science Foundation (NSF) Noyce Scholarship Program, to promote planning and professional development towards a science/mathematics education career.

For more information about the CalTeach-SMI program, please visit smi.ucr.edu, the Resource Center at 1114 Pierce Hall, or on Facebook at facebook.com/ScienceMathInitiativeAtUcr and on Instagram at instagram.com/smiatucr/.

Combined B.S. + M.S. Five-Year Program

The college offers a combined B.S. + M.S. program in Mechanical Engineering designed to lead to a Bachelor of Science degree as well as a Master of Science degree in five years. Applicants for this program must have a high school GPA above 3.6, complete the Entry Level Writing Requirement before matriculation, and have sufficient mathematics preparation to enroll in calculus in their first quarter as freshmen. Eight units of technical electives will count in both programs, reducing the total number of units required for the MS degree.

Interested students who are entering their junior year should check with their academic advisor for information on eligibility and other details.

Admission

In addition to the following requirements, all applicants must meet the general requirements of the Riverside Division of the Academic Senate and the UCR Graduate Council as set forth in this catalog under the Graduate Studies section.

Language Requirement

All international students whose first language is not English must demonstrate proficiency in spoken English by securing at least a "conditional pass" score on the TAST or SPEAK test before they can be appointed as a TA. However, to be considered for subsequent TA appointments, they must secure a "clear pass" on the TAST or SPEAK. The fee associated with this test is paid by the department for the first attempt only. The TAST or SPEAK requirement is, however, waived for international students who are appointed as GSRs or are self-supported throughout their studies at UCR.

Master's Degree

The Department of Mechanical Engineering offers the M.S. degree in Mechanical Engineering.

Admission

Applicants should have an undergraduate degree in engineering, physical sciences, or mathematics with a minimum overall GPA of 3.0 or equivalent (if GPA is not based on a 4.0 scale). All official transcripts and three letters of recommendation must be submitted for evaluation. Foreign students and permanent residents whose first language is not English must also submit an acceptable TOEFL test score prior to admittance; the minimum TOEFL exam score is 550 (paper-based) or 80 (internet-based).

The M.S. degree in Mechanical Engineering can be earned by either completing a thesis (Plan I), which reports a creative investigation of a defined problem, or passing a comprehensive examination (Plan II). A minimum of three quarters of residency is required. Students should enroll in 12 units each quarter unless the graduate advisor grants an exception.

Course work used to satisfy the student's undergraduate degree requirements may not be applied toward the 36-unit M.S. requirement.

Plan I (Thesis)

Requires completion of a minimum of 36 units of upper-division and graduate-level approved course work and submission of an acceptable thesis. At least 24 of these units must be in graduate courses (200-series courses), a minimum of twenty of these units being Mechanical Engineering graduate courses (ME 200 or higher, excluding ME 250, ME 290, ME 297, ME 2981, and ME 299). The student must take at least 3 units of seminar (ME 250) and at least 7 but no more than 11 units of directed or thesis research credits (ME 297 or ME 299). No more than 8 units of course work may be satisfied with directed studies (ME 290) or individual internship (ME 2981). Students must defend the thesis.

An acceptable M.S. thesis must be submitted. The M.S. thesis may be based on:

1. A research or advanced design project, either analytical, computational or experimental;
2. An extensive report consisting of theoretical, computational or experimental contribution to mechanical engineering.

The student's M.S. Thesis Committee is responsible for approving the thesis. The thesis committee is composed of three members (including the research advisor).

The Thesis Defense can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person, Hybrid, or Remote. The chair of the exam committee will decide the mode, taking into consideration the constraints of the student and the committee members. Students taking the defense In-Person are expected to be present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to take the defense on campus in a video-enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remotely. If Remote is chosen, the student and all committee members attend remotely via video conferencing.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Requires completion of a minimum of 36 units of upper-division and graduate-level approved course work and successfully passing a comprehensive examination. At least 24 of these units must be in graduate courses (200 series courses), a minimum of twenty of these units being Mechanical Engineering graduate courses (ME 200 or higher, excluding ME 250, ME 290, ME 297, ME 2981, and ME 299). The student must take 1 unit of seminar (ME 250) and no more than 7 units of directed studies (ME 290) or individual internship (ME 2981). Guidelines for preparation to the comprehensive examination are detailed in the Graduate Student Handbook.

Normative Time to Degree

Two years

Refer to the department's graduate program guidelines for further details.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Mechanical Engineering offers the Ph.D. degree in Mechanical Engineering.

Admission

Applicants should have an undergraduate degree in engineering, physical sciences, or mathematics with a minimum overall GPA of 3.0 or equivalent (if GPA is not based on a 4.0 scale). A master's degree is not required for admission to the Ph.D. program. All official transcripts and three letters of recommendation must be submitted for evaluation. Foreign students and permanent residents whose first language is not English must also submit an acceptable TOEFL test score prior to admission; the minimum TOEFL exam score is 550 (paper-based) or 80 (internet-based). Students in the M.S. program of Mechanical Engineering who desire to pursue the Ph.D. degree must formally apply for admission to the Ph.D. program.

The procedure for satisfying the requirements for the Ph.D. degree in Mechanical Engineering at UCR consists of four principal parts:

1. Successful completion of an approved program of course work below
2. Passing a written and oral preliminary examination
3. Successful oral defense of a written dissertation proposal
4. Defense and approval of the dissertation

Course Work

A course work plan has to be formulated by the student in coordination with their research advisor or the program graduate advisor. It is understood that changes to this may occur as the student's research progresses. These changes should be documented after consultation with the research advisor or the program graduate advisor.

Core Course Work

Before the oral defense of the dissertation proposal at least 32 units of course work must be completed. This is excluding seminar and research credits. Of these a minimum of twenty-four graduate units must be in Mechanical Engineering courses (ME 200 or higher, excluding ME 250, ME 290, ME 297, ME 298-I, and ME 299). Typically students also enroll in ME 250 and ME 297 units their first year. The student may be advised to take additional courses prior to advancement to candidacy.

Seminar Requirement

The student must also complete 6 units of ME 250 (seminar) prior to graduation. One unit of ME 250 is offered each quarter. These units do not have to be completed before the dissertation proposal defense.

Research Units

At least 36 units of directed or thesis research credits (ME 297 or ME 299) must be taken prior to graduation.

Courses taken as part of the Ph.D. requirement in Mechanical Engineering at UCR can be used to satisfy the course requirements for an M.S. in Mechanical Engineering at UCR and vice versa.

Normative Time to Degree

Five years

Written and Oral Preliminary Examination

The examination aims to screen candidates for pursuing doctoral studies. It is administered by the graduate program committee and is composed of two sessions:

Session 1: Written Examination

Session 2: Oral Examination

Normally, both sessions are completed within a four-week period. The written examination is designed to test understanding of graduate-level mechanical engineering concepts and methods. It covers three subject areas to be selected by the student among the following: materials structure & properties, control systems, engineering analysis, fluid mechanics, heat transfer, thermodynamics, solid mechanics. Students are strongly encouraged to complete the relevant graduate-level course work for the selected subject areas. For details, consult the departmental guidelines. The oral examination assesses the student's ability to conduct independent research. Consult departmental guidelines for details. The preliminary examination is normally offered once every year at the beginning of the summer session.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

After successfully completing the preliminary examination, the student, with advice from the advisor, recommends a qualifying committee and prepares a dissertation proposal. The dissertation proposal consists of a written document and an oral presentation or defense. Typically, the student submits a dissertation proposal to the qualifying committee within one year after successfully completing the preliminary examination and completion of the required 24 units of graduate core courses. The qualifying committee chair normally schedules an oral defense within one month of the written proposal submission. The presentation is given only to the qualifying committee members. The student is advanced to candidacy after successfully completing this examination and all coursework.

After completing the dissertation research, a written draft copy of the completed dissertation must be submitted to the dissertation committee for review, evaluation, and determination of whether the draft thesis is ready for oral defense. Once a draft has been approved for defense, an oral defense of the dissertation is scheduled and is open to the entire academic community. This defense consists of a presentation, followed by a question-and-answer period conducted by the dissertation committee and the audience. After successfully defending the dissertation, the candidate must submit final copies of the dissertation that comply with the format requirements set forth by the Graduate Division. Copies are given to the department and the dissertation advisor, in addition to those required by the Graduate Division.

Consult departmental guidelines for appointments to qualifying and dissertation committees.

Format for Oral Qualifying Exam and Final Defense

The Oral Qualifying Exam and Final Defense can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person, Hybrid, or Remote. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to take the exam or the defense on campus in a video-enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remotely. If Remote is chosen, the student and all committee members attend remotely via video conferencing.

Major

The Media and Cultural Studies major focuses an interdisciplinary lens on the analysis of the dynamic relationship between media, cultural production and society with special emphasis on race, gender, class, sexuality, and ethnicity as well as political economy and globalization. Our students critically engage in major debates about social and environmental justice within both global and local contexts. They also learn through pragmatic creative attainments in media ecologies such as creative, documentary, and ethnographic film; photography; multimedia production; and journalism. Media literacies are essential for the making of engaged global citizens, capable of moving flexibly between the applied and the critical, the professional and the scholarly, the empirical and the theoretical.

Designated Emphasis Requirements

The Designated Emphasis is a 16-unit interdisciplinary graduate course of study, requiring students to demonstrate focused coursework and research in the field. Two of the four required courses, if otherwise eligible, may count towards the student's Ph.D. requirements. There are two core requirements:

1. Four (4) graduate courses (16 units). Students will only be allowed to take one (1) undergraduate qualified course paired with a 292 in this DE. These courses must be taken in at least two different departments: ANTH 261, ANTH 262, ANTH 265, ANTH 281, CWPA 210, CWPA 279, CWPA 285, DNCE 254, DNCE 257, ENGL 247, ENGL 273, ENGL 274, ENGL 278, ETST 201, ETST 221, ETST 222, HIST 220, HIST 238, PHIL 261, PHIL 283, PSYC 225, PSYC 255, PSYC 262, RLST 224.

2. Submission of a research portfolio within one year after the quarter in which the student advances to candidacy. The portfolio, to be reviewed by a standing committee of the Medical and Health Humanities Faculty, will demonstrate significant research in the field, include two research papers (one research paper must be the product of one of the 4 unit qualifying courses) and syllabi from the four completed courses. The student will also submit a self-statement (of no more than 1000 words) articulating their particular research emphasis and expertise, and one Medical and Health Humanities syllabus created by student.

All requirements for the Designated Emphasis must be satisfied within one year after the quarter in which a student advances to candidacy in their Ph.D. field; a minimum GPA of 3.0 is required for the award of the Designated Emphasis.

Purpose

The Minor in Medical and Health Humanities Studies (MHHS) at UCR emphasizes the inextricable relationship between the Humanities, Social Sciences, and the Arts and their contributions to explicating health, illness, and medicine. This proposal fits within the growing national and international recognition of Medical and Health Humanities in providing students with the skills to perceive, understand, and document diverse human experiences in health and medicine. The three proposed streams; Science and Medicine, Society, Culture, and Health, and Arts in Wellness represent traditional foci in the fields of Medical and Health Humanities and are areas of faculty research and art making at UCR. The Minor will serve as the foundation for students to examine current and historical narratives, discourses, and artistic expressions of health, and emphasizes that health and pathology are not only the domain of medicine and biomedical sciences but also rich topics for interdisciplinary humanities and artistic inquiry. As an interdisciplinary field the our MHHS Minor expands the sites and measures of medicine beyond the clinical encounter. The intentional integration of Humanities, Social Sciences, and Arts is a recognition that medicine is best viewed not as in service or in opposition to the clinical and life sciences, but as generatively enmeshed with a biomedical culture and diverse understandings of what constitutes medicine, health, and wellness.

UCR School of Medicine

The mission of the UCR School of Medicine is to improve the health of the people of California and, especially, to serve Inland Southern California by training a diverse workforce of physicians and by developing innovative research and health care delivery programs that will improve the health of the medically underserved in the region and become models to be emulated throughout the state and nation.

With its opening in 2013, the UCR School of Medicine became the first new public medical school in California in more than four decades. It is expressly designed to meet the physician workforce needs in Inland Southern California and to improve the health of people living in the region. The school's community-based model provides medical students with clinical experiences in a variety of healthcare settings with diverse patient populations.

The UCR School of Medicine seeks students with diverse intellectual and life experiences. The school values broad academic backgrounds that include humanities, foreign language, social sciences and the arts to help prepare future physicians for interacting with increasingly diverse patient populations, health care professionals and colleagues. Each applicant's complete portfolio will be reviewed carefully in order to select students who are not only academically qualified but who have the breadth of volunteer/community and personal experiences to ensure that they will become physicians well prepared to care for the diverse population in our communities. somsa.ucr.edu

The Thomas Haider Program at the UCR School of Medicine is a special program within the school that provides a unique pathway into medical school for UCR students, with up to 24 seats filled by students who attend UCR for at least six consecutive quarters and complete their bachelor's degree at UCR. somsa.ucr.edu/haider-program

All School of Medicine applicants apply to the UCR School of Medicine through the American Medical College Application Service, at students-residents.aamc.org/applying-medical-school-amcas/applying-medical-school-amcas, following its guidelines and deadlines. Students may submit their applications at any time during the application period, as early as June (14 months before medical school classes begin in August at UCR) or as late as November 2 (9 months before classes begin). Applications without recent MCAT scores are considered incomplete. Review the application guidelines at somsa.ucr.edu.

The Program in Medical Education (PRIME)

is designed to produce physicians who are specifically trained to address the healthcare needs of the African, Black, and Caribbean (ABC) communities of Inland Southern California. UCR's PRIME will admit six students annually, who will complete educational and clinical activities that prepare them to provide equitable care to ABC populations. The program begins with a two-week summer immersion program prior to the start of the academic school year. The School of Medicine will partner with ABC clinicians and organizations to allow students to integrate working with ABC populations throughout the course of their medical education. Students will have the option to pursue a master's degree (e.g., MPH, MPP, MBA, etc.) in the field of their choosing, before completing their final year of medical school. <https://ume.ucr.edu/prime>

Program Prerequisites

Pre-medical Education

The School of Medicine expects candidates to be well prepared to engage curriculum in the basic sciences. Applicants are expected to cover foundational areas to demonstrate the ability to succeed in medical school. Lab course hours do NOT count toward total semester hours.

Required Science Core

- Mathematics (8 semester hours) in calculus and/or statistics
- Physics (8 semester hours), labs optional
- General Chemistry, Organic Chemistry, Biochemistry (16 semester hours), labs optional
- Biology (8 semester hours), labs optional

Recommended Humanities Core

The School of Medicine seeks to develop the whole Student with curriculum that prepares future physicians to meet the needs of underserved communities. To that end, courses that emphasize culture, ethic, public health, spiritual practices, and other aspects of diversity are recommended. The committee appreciates candidates listing their humanities or social science courses in these subject areas.

- English, Writing, Composition, Logic or Critical Thinking (8 semester hours)
- Humanities/Social Science (8 semester hours)
- Spanish (3 semester hours)

Completion of Requirements

Students must complete all premedical requirements before beginning the first year of medical study, although these requirements need not be completed at the time application for admission is filed. AP credit with a score of 4 or 5 (or International Baccalaureate score of 6 or 7) can be used to satisfy all subjects.

Medical College Admission Test (MCAT)

The MCAT must be taken not later than fall of the year preceding admission to the School of Medicine. If more than one MCAT was taken, all the test grades must be included when making an application. The test must be repeated if, at the time of application, more than three years have elapsed since it was taken. Requests for test reports and all other correspondence and requests for information concerning the administration, processing, and scoring of the MCAT should be directed to the MCAT Program Office.

Additional details regarding application requirements and the admissions process can be found at somsa.ucr.edu

Academic Advising

UCR undergraduates receive academic advising from professional staff and faculty of the department or program of their chosen major. Professional staff and peer mentors in the medical school's Health Professions Advising Center are available to guide students in planning pre-health professions course work, gaining health-related experiences, completing service work and can assist with preparing to apply for admission to graduate and professional programs. ## Major Microorganisms play key roles in ecosystems and human civilization. They can both cause and prevent a wide array of diseases in animals and plants. They are key components in the manufacturing of bread, cheese, and other food products. Microbes are involved in soil formation, global environmental processes and detoxifying contaminated environments. In addition, they contain a wealth of useful compounds and enzymes for biotechnology.

The Microbiology major is unique because it offers research based capstone course (MCBL 125) that trains students to become research scientists. The major also offers many laboratory courses enabling students to obtain highly valuable skills.

Students earning a degree will be prepared to continue studies at the graduate level, earn teaching credentials, or enter professional schools in medicine, pharmacy, optometry, dentistry, veterinary medicine, and clinical laboratory science among others. Students will also be trained for technical careers in medicine, agriculture, biotechnology and environmental fields. For information on how to select elective coursework for specific career paths, visit the CNAS Undergraduate Academic Advising Center.

Students in the Microbiology major can obtain either B.A. or B.S. degrees or both B.S. and M.S. in our combined program. The B.S. degree offers students with a strong interest in the natural sciences an opportunity to emphasize this aspect of their education. The B.A. degree is available to students who wish to obtain a broader background in the humanities and social sciences than is required of students in the B.S. program.

Combined B.S. + M.S. Five-Year Program Requirements

The Undergraduate and Graduate Programs in Microbiology offers a combined B.S. + M.S. program in Microbiology designed to lead to a Bachelor of Science degree as well as a Master of Science degree in five years.

Applicants for this program must intend to enroll in the UCR Microbiology M.S. program, have a high school GPA above 3.6 (when applying to enroll as a freshman or during their freshman year), a 3.5 GPA in major (upper division classes only, minimum of 11 units to be completed by the end of junior year, and a 3.2 GPA overall in their undergraduate program. Interested students who intend to enter the program in their junior year should check with their academic advisor for information on eligibility, admission requirements, and other details.

During the M.S. portion of this program, students must maintain a grade-point average (both in the major and overall) of at least 3.0 for all course work, both cumulatively and for each quarter of enrollment. If the student's GPA falls below 3.0 (for either the major or overall), the student may be dropped from the program.

Master of Science

The Graduate Program in Microbiology offers the M.S. degree in Microbiology.

General university requirements are listed in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. Students may obtain an M.S. degree in Microbiology through the Plan II (Comprehensive Examination).

Professional Development

All M.S. students participate in the program's seminar (MCBL 250) each quarter of the master's year when offered, and they are also encouraged to take the program's professional development course (PLPA 265).

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination)

Overall Requirements

Students must complete 36 units of approved graduate work in microbiology. At least 24 of these 36 units must be graduate level courses (200-level). A maximum of 12 units of upper-division (100-level) MCBL courses can be applied toward the 36-unit requirement.

Course Requirements

- Microbiology Graduate Core Courses (MCBL 202, 211, 221)
- 24 units graduate level MCBL courses (200-level) minimum
- Additional 200 and 100 level courses to complete the 36 units

Written Comprehensive Exam

Students take a comprehensive exam created from relevant material from at least 3 of the 200-level microbiology courses, usually the microbiology core courses. Failure to pass the comprehensive examinations after two opportunities constitutes grounds for dismissal from the program.

Normative Time to Degree

15 quarters (B.S. + M.S.)
3 quarters (M.S.)

Graduate Program

The Graduate Program in Microbiology is an interdisciplinary program with participating faculty from the departments of Evolution, Ecology and Organismal Biology, Molecular, Cell, and Systems Biology, Chemical and Environmental Engineering, Chemistry, Entomology, Environmental Sciences, Microbiology and Plant Pathology, and the Division of Biomedical Sciences. Faculty research interests are concentrated in several disciplines in the areas of basic and applied microbiology. These disciplines include the following:

- Microbial Pathogenesis
- Environmental Microbiology and Ecology
- Microbial Evolution, Genomics, and Metagenomics
- Molecular and Cellular Microbiology

Admission

For admission into the graduate program in Microbiology, a student must have a B.A. or B.S. degree from an accredited institution and an academic record that satisfies the minimum admission standards established by the UCR Graduate Division.

Although no specific undergraduate degree specialization is required, applicants should have an adequate background in the physical and biological sciences, including the following or equivalent courses:

CHEM 001A, CHEM 001B, CHEM 001C (General Chemistry), CHEM 008A and 08LA or CHEM 08HA and CHEM 8HLA, CHEM 008B and CHEM 08LB or CHEM 08HB and CHEM 8HLB, CHEM 008C and CHEM 08LC or CHEM 08HC and CHEM 8HLC (Organic Chemistry), BCH 110A or BCH 110HA, BCH 110B or BCH 110HB (Biochemistry), MATH 007A or MATH 009A, MATH 007B or MATH 009B (Calculus), STAT 010 or STAT 120A (Statistics), BIOL 102 (Genetics), BIOL 121A/MCBL 121A, BIOL 121L/MCBL 121L (Microbiology), BIOL 107A or BCH 110C (Molecular Biology)

This list is intended to represent the minimum background required for students wishing to pursue a graduate degree in Microbiology. Additional course work and laboratory experience in microbiology, biochemistry or genetics is highly desirable. However, upon the recommendation of the graduate advisory committee, occasionally a student may be admitted into the graduate program with one or more course work deficiencies; such students must satisfy these course work deficiencies usually within the first and no later than within the second year of graduate study.

Curriculum

The program is designed to prepare students for teaching and research careers in colleges and universities, as well as basic and applied research in private, industrial and government laboratories. To attain this goal, a three-tiered set of coursework has been designed: See Master's Degree and Course Work section under Doctoral Degree.

Ph.D. and M.S. students must attend one seminar per week each quarter, when offered, in programs collaborating with Microbiology. The seminar course must be chosen from the following list: MCBL 250, PLPA 250. Other seminar courses may be approved by the graduate advisor. Students are also required to present one seminar during their tenure in the program. The seminar can be either on the student's thesis research or related topics and can be presented in any of several program student seminar series.

Master's Degree

M.S. students must fulfill the requirements for Plan I (Thesis) or Plan II (Comprehensive Examination) of the Graduate Council. All students must complete at least 11 units of 200-level coursework, which can include the microbiology core courses and/or other microbiology courses chosen in consultation with the student advisory committee. Non-microbiology courses can also be used for this 200-level coursework requirement with approval from the student's advisory committee and the graduate advisor. Plan I requires 36 units, of which 24 must be in graduate level courses. Of the 24, a maximum of 12 may be in graduate research for the thesis. The student must also submit and defend an acceptable research thesis. For the Plan II Masters, the Comprehensive Examination option, students must complete 36 units total, of which at least 24 must be in 200-level coursework, which should include the microbiology core courses and/or other microbiology courses chosen in consultation with the student advisory committee. Of the 24 200-level units, a maximum of 6 units may be in graduate research, but no research units are required for this option. The student must also pass a comprehensive exam created from relevant material from at least 3 of the 200-level microbiology courses that the student has already completed, usually the 3 microbiology core courses.

Normative Time to Degree

Doctoral Degree

Ph.D. students must meet all requirements of the Graduate Council. Students satisfactorily complete the core class requirements and a program of courses approved by the student advisory committee. The Ph.D. degree is awarded upon passing the preliminary and qualifying examinations and demonstrating an ability to carry out original research by preparing and submitting an acceptable dissertation.

Students enrolled in the Ph.D. program are expected to become actively engaged in a research project no later than the end of their first year, and research progress is monitored by the student's advisory committee until the student advances to candidacy and a dissertation committee is appointed. The program stresses the importance of innovative and independent laboratory research as the major component of the student's education.

Course Work

The program is designed to prepare students for teaching and research careers in colleges and universities, as well as basic and applied research in private, industrial and government laboratories. To attain this goal, a three-tiered curriculum has been designed whereby students are expected to complete the following:

1. A core sequence of classes in microbiology: MCBL 202 (Microbial Pathogenesis and Physiology), BIOL 221/MCBL 221 (Microbial Genetics), and MCBL 211 (Microbial Ecology)
2. A selection of at least one elective graduate (200-level) course in microbiology or other relevant field(s) chosen in consultation with the student's major professor and the advisory committee in order to develop depth in particular areas of specialization.
3. Research training in specific areas of microbiology (at least 6 units of MCBL 297 or MCBL 299).

Students fulfill their professional development training by enrolling in PLPA 265, a 3 unit course that covers a range of topics including careers in microbiology, CV preparation, skills on giving scientific presentations, strategies for success in the candidacy examination and graduate school, data acquisition, management and ownership, policy and regulation, and intellectual property.

Preliminary Examination

The preliminary examination, consisting of a written, comprehensive examination is based on general microbiology and required material in the student's area of specialization. If a student fails this examination, the advisory committee recommends either additional course work in specific areas of weakness, transfer to a terminal M.S. degree program, or withdrawal from the program. The preliminary examination may only be repeated once and must be passed for the student to continue in the Ph.D. program. The preliminary examination is normally taken in the spring quarter of the second year.

Oral Qualifying Examination

After completion of the preliminary examination, the qualifying committee is established, and the oral qualifying examination is normally taken no later than the eighth quarter (year three) of academic work, not counting summer quarters.

A qualifying committee is nominated by the graduate advisory committee and submitted to the graduate dean for approval. Suggestions of potential members of the qualifying committee may be submitted to the advisory committee by the student and the student's major professor. The qualifying committee is composed of five faculty members: three with expertise in the area of specialization in microbiology, one representing a different area from microbiology, and one outside member. The student's major professor may not serve on the qualifying committee. Prior to the oral qualifying examination, the student submits a written dissertation research proposal to the members of the qualifying committee. The oral examination covers the student's area of specialization and research field and must be passed for the student to continue in the program. Upon successful completion of the qualifying examination, the student is advanced to candidacy. The qualifying examination may be repeated only once.

The Oral Qualifying Exam can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the circumstances, with the advisor making the determination. If the student or one of the other committee members protests the decision, the Program Director will make the final determination. Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remotely.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

The dissertation committee is nominated by the graduate advisor for approval by the graduate dean (upon successful completion of the qualifying examination) and is composed of the student's major professor and at least two other faculty members suggested by the student and the student's major professor. Before approval of the dissertation, the student is expected to present orally the dissertation research at an announced defense seminar.

The Final Defense can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the circumstances with the advisor making the determination. If the student or one of the other committee members protests the decision, the Program Director will make the final determination. Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remotely.

Teaching Requirement

Two quarters of teaching experience is required, which may be satisfied by serving as a teaching assistant in any of the microbiology courses listed.

Foreign Language Requirement

None

Majors

The Middle East and Islamic Studies major is designed to provide undergraduate students with a broad understanding of Middle Eastern and Islamic societies and cultures. The program offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of the Middle East and Islamic traditions with focuses on religion, history, gender and sexuality, literature, art, and popular discourses and practices, which canvass from North Africa to Southeast Asia.

The multidisciplinary nature of the program prepares students for a critical understanding of current issues and further study in a number of academic fields at the graduate level. The major is useful to students planning careers in politics and government, business, education, international and national non-governmental organizations, journalism, and the art, as well as for those who desire a better understanding of the Middle East, Islam, and Islamic cultures.

Majors

The Music Department offers undergraduate majors leading to the B.A. in Music and the B.A. in Music and Culture.

Scholarships

Students have access to student assistantships, work-study, Gluck Fellowships, and scholarships. For further information or a department tour, call the Music Department, (951) 827-7059.

Performance

Throughout each academic year the Department of Music and Cultural Events sponsors more than 50 formal and informal concerts and recitals by campus ensembles, students, members of the performance faculty, and distinguished visiting artists. Most of the Music Department concerts are open to the public.

Facilities

The department's facilities include practice rooms equipped with Yamaha pianos, a Piano Lab, a Chamber Music Studio, and a large lecture/rehearsal hall, as well as smaller classrooms and practice rooms. Practice rooms are available to Music Majors and to students enrolled in an ensemble or in a course with a Voice & Instrument instructor. Most Practice rooms are open to music students on a first-come/first-served basis. For other Practice rooms, students can submit a request for a key to CHASS facilities via the website: chassintranet.ucr.edu/kims. The student's undergraduate advisor must approve the request.

Lockers for small- and medium-size instruments are available to students inside Arts 068 (Instrument Storage Room). A limited number of lockers next to the Piano Lab are reserved for large instruments. The department owns significant collection of early-music instruments, including a number of early keyboard instruments, as well as instruments for use in traditional chamber, orchestral, and wind ensembles. The department also owns the instruments for several Asian ensembles, i.e., Javanese gamelan, Japanese taiko, Philippine rondalla, North Indiana tabla, and Korean drums, as well as for two Latin American ensembles, Andean and Mexican folkloric music. The Experimental Acoustic Research Studio (EARS) supports the composition of electronic music and is housed at a location near campus. The department is also home to the Center for Iberian and Latin American Music, which sponsors concerts and lectures in addition to maintaining a website and scholarly journal.

The UCR library holds strong music-research collections located in two facilities. Approximately 36,000 books about music may be found in the Rivera Library, along with an authoritative collection of reference works, journal back-files and microforms. The Rivera library also provides listening equipment, computers, and houses collections of more than 12,500 records and CDs, a growing collection of music DVDs, and more than 38,000 music scores. The UCR Library also provides online access to music, recordings, videos, books, and journals for use in music research. Special Collections, on the 4th floor of the Rivera Library, holds numerous 18th- and 19th-century scores of major German and Austrian composers, as well as the Oswald Jonas and Joaquin Nin-Culmell archives. The UCR library homepage, library.ucr.edu, provides access to the UC system's online catalog, as well as links to a wide variety of electronic resources.

Music Major

The Department of Music offers a Bachelor of Arts in music within the context of a liberal arts curriculum. Students acquire practical knowledge of music performance and composition through individual study as well as participation in one or more of the department's several ensembles. Development of the student's vocal and/or instrumental technique is enhanced by the study of musicianship, theory, and history, which impart a deeper understanding of the structure of music and the cultural forces that shape it.

Time to degree

Time to degree is four years. Freshman year: preparatory courses MUS001 and MUS010. Sophomore year: lower division requirements; piano proficiency. Junior year: upper division requirements (130AB, 138, 112ABC), track requirements, and electives. Senior year: upper division track requirements, and electives.

Students declare a Major in Music in the General or Music Industry Tracks by the end of their freshman year. Students that wish to declare a Major in Music within the Performance Track must first pass an audition. Students that wish to declare a Major in Music within the Composition Track must first take MUS 037 and pass an audition.

The Major offers four curricular tracks, among which students may choose a concentration:

1. Music - General
2. Music - Composition
3. Music - Performance
4. Music - Music Industry

Music and Culture Major

The Music and Culture major offers a predominantly scholarly and critical approach to music as culture from the perspective of research, criticism, and interpretation, with an emphasis on historical and ethnographic approaches. It is oriented primarily toward understanding music as a culturally expressive form. Courses in music and/or dance performance are required but are positioned more broadly within the major as a means to explore interrelationships between music and other forms of performance.

Examinations and Auditions

The ability to play simple piano music is required of all majors. Students lacking keyboard proficiency when the major is declared must enroll in MUS 080P to prepare them for the proficiency examination, administered by the Department's piano instructor. Alternatively, students with previous keyboard experience can request to take the proficiency examination instead of enrolling in MUS 080P. This examination must be passed by the junior year.

Consult the department for examination requirements.

Students that wish to declare a Major in Music within the Performance track must complete an audition prior to the declaration of the major. Consult the department for audition requirements and scheduling.

Students that wish to declare a Major in Music within the Composition Track must 1) complete MUS 037 with a grade C or higher, and 2) present three diverse works (one of which must be realized through music notation) to the composition faculty during a brief audition at the end of the sophomore year.

If entering as a Junior, transfer Performance and Composition students will need to schedule an audition upon arrival to campus. The MUS 037 prerequisite for Composition students can be waived at the faculty's discretion.

MUS 031A, MUS 031B, and MUS 031C are taken until proficiency for admission to MUS 131A is achieved. The completion of MUS 131A, MUS 131B, and MUS 131C is required for graduation.

All students normally participate in a major ensemble each quarter. Admission to any ensemble course is by consent of instructor. All students intending to participate in an ensemble course must audition during registration.

Juries

Juries are mandatory for Music juniors and seniors enrolled in the Performance Track. Students must play for two of them, on two different quarters, within each academic year. Students do not play for juries the quarter in which they perform a senior recital. Juries are optional for non-Music Majors, and Music Majors who are not in the Performance Track but who are nevertheless taking Voice & Instrument lessons at the Department. Please note that an instructor may require that a student participate play for juries even if they are not in the Performance Track.

Fees

An additional course fee will be charged at the time of registration for MUS 080 (E-Z), MUS 081 (E-Z) (half-hour private lessons in voice or instrument), MUS 180 (E-Z), and MUS 181 (E-Z) (one-hour private lessons in voice or instrument). A limited number of scholarships will be made available.

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of Music offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Music with a specialization in three areas: composition, ethnomusicology, and musicology. Students are encouraged to view music in the broad context of culture: communication between the intradisciplinary areas is built into the program, and courses outside the department are either encouraged or required in order to develop an interdisciplinary outlook.

Admission

Applicants may apply for a terminal M.A. degree. Applicants intending to pursue a Ph.D. as their final degree objective should apply directly to the Ph.D. program. Applicants with a B.A. should follow the requirements for the M.A. for the first six quarters.

Applicants are admitted into the graduate program in the fall quarter only. All applicants must submit an example of their writing.

Composers must also submit three to five original compositions and corresponding recordings (MIDI mockups are acceptable). At least two pieces should be realized with notation software, while others may take the form of electronic music. In addition, composers are encouraged to submit music software that they have authored or other digital audio related activity (papers, sound installations, etc.).

Graduate composition applicants may come from an untraditional background and not possess previous music degrees. However, applicants must have earned an undergraduate degree to be considered for admission.

Musicology applicants must have an M.A. or undergraduate degree in music, including piano proficiency and musicianship (ear training).

Ethnomusicology applicants must have a background in music or anthropology. Evidence of superior intellectual ability in another field combined with some demonstrable expertise in any musical tradition is also viewed favorably.

Entering graduate students in composition and musicology must take an advisory examination. In musicology, admission to full graduate status is contingent upon the removal of any deficiencies in undergraduate preparation as shown by this advisory examination. In digital composition, deficiencies in undergraduate preparation must be completed by the time of the Comprehensive Examination.

In composition, deficiencies in undergraduate preparation must be completed by the time of the Comprehensive Examination.

Professional Development Requirements

The Professional Development courses (MUS 301 and MUS 400, taken jointly) satisfy the Professional Development requirement for both the MA and PhD degrees. Topics discussed typically include: course design; pedagogy; flipped classrooms; designing examinations; facilitating discussion; gender and race issues in the classroom; interviewing, writing, and oral presentation skills; publishing; the academic job market and the job application process; and nonacademic careers.

Master's Degree

The M.A. Degree

The Department of Music offers the M.A. degree in Music under Plan II (Comprehensive Examination).

Requirements

In addition to the coursework indicated below, all students must meet the following requirements.

1. Comprehensive examination

All students must pass a written and/or oral comprehensive examination during their sixth quarter, testing knowledge over a broad spectrum of their field of study.

- a. The ethnomusicology comprehensive exam consists of the following: 1) A portfolio of the student's work from the first 5 quarters in the program, prepared under the supervision of the student's chosen advisor. This portfolio should include an introduction, CV, representative work from seminars or other courses, and one revised and augmented seminar paper of article length directed at publication. To prepare the portfolio, students may take up to one quarter of MUS 291 (Individual Study in Coordinated Areas, 4 credits) with their advisor, typically in the winter quarter of their second year. The complete portfolio should be submitted to the committee at the beginning of spring quarter (~April 1st), and the oral exam is scheduled for later that month. 2) A one-hour oral exam with a committee of three faculty, chaired by the student's advisor. The portfolio and revised seminar paper are the subject of the oral exam. The oral exam may be conducted in-person or hybrid, at the discretion of the student's advisor.

- b. The musicology comprehensive exam consists of the following: 1) a portfolio of the student's work from the first 5 quarters in the program, along with a brief introduction, prepared under the supervision of the student's advisor; and 2) a one-hour written exam covering Western art music theory and history. For students interested in continuing to the PhD, the portfolio should also include an additional revised and augmented seminar paper of 8,000-10,000 words, directed toward publication, prepared under the supervision of the student's advisor. The portfolio and results of the written exam will be reviewed by a committee of three faculty to determine the outcome of the comprehensive exam.
- c. The composition comprehensive exam consists of the following: 1) a portfolio of the student's work (containing at least three pieces) from the first 5 quarters in the program; and 2) a composition test comprised of several applied exercises. The portfolio and results of the composition test will be reviewed by a committee of three faculty to determine the outcome of the comprehensive exam.

The comprehensive examination can be passed at the M.A. or at the Ph.D. level. Passing the exam at the Ph.D. level is a requirement for students intending to pursue a Ph.D. Failure to pass the comprehensive examinations after two opportunities constitutes grounds for dismissal from the program.

2. Foreign Language Requirement

Students must demonstrate a reading knowledge of a foreign language, of use in scholarship within their discipline or chosen to support their research and creative interests, with the approval of the department. The requirement can be satisfied either by examination or by enrolling in 4 quarters of a language course with a grade of "B" or better.

3. Coursework

Each area requires a minimum of 48 units of graduate (200 series) or upper-division undergraduate courses (100 series), these may include up to 8 units of MUS 299 (Thesis Preparation). Twenty four units must be graduate level. None may be MUS 291, MUS 301 or MUS 400.

Doctoral Program

The Department of Music offers the Ph.D. degree in Music. Students are invited by the faculty to continue toward candidacy for the Ph.D. degree on the basis of performance in courses and seminars, the quality of their portfolios, passing the comprehensive examination at the Ph.D. level, satisfactory completion of the M.A. requirements, and the recommendation of the faculty in their track (digital composition, musicology or ethnomusicology), in consultation with the graduate advisor.

Students with an M.A. degree from other universities are eligible for admission. The process of admission is the same as for students with a B.A.

Requirements

1. Foreign language requirement

Musicology and ethnomusicology students must demonstrate a reading knowledge of a second foreign language, of use in scholarship within their discipline or chosen to support their research and creative interests. Students in these concentrations with an M.A. from other universities, who did not have to meet a foreign language requirement, must demonstrate a reading knowledge of two foreign languages during their residency at UCR. Digital composition students are required to demonstrate a reading knowledge of one foreign language.

2. Coursework

Students continuing toward the Ph.D. must take 36 additional units earned in seminars and in MUS 291 and MUS 299 studies geared toward preparation for the qualifying examinations. None may be MUS 301 or MUS 400.

Students entering with an M.A. from another institution must take a minimum of 48 units earned in seminars and directed studies (MUS 290). These must include the following required courses, although waiver may be granted for specific courses on an individual basis, depending on the student's prior graduate training and pending faculty approval. Students are encouraged to take additional seminars and MUS 291 and MUS 299 courses geared toward preparation for the qualifying examinations.

Ethnomusicology students must meet the course requirements of the M.A. as stated above.

Digital composition students are required to take:

a) Core requirements

MUS 200, MUS 201, MUS 206 or MUS 207B, MUS 256, MUS 258 (repeatable), MUS 265, MUS 293 (6 units), MUS 301, MUS 400

b) Two of the following repeatable courses:

MUS 232, MUS 249, MUS 251, MUS 257, MUS 259, MUS 264

Musicology students are required to take:

a) Core requirements

MUS 200, MUS 201, MUS 206, MUS 207B or MUS 255, MUS 301, MUS 400

b) Five courses in the 260s series:

MUS 261, MUS 262, MUS 263

3. Qualifying examinations

Students must take the qualifying examinations, both written and oral, supervised by a faculty committee as stipulated in the regulations of the Graduate Division. The qualifying examinations concentrate on testing advanced skills and knowledge of specialized fields. Digital composition students are also expected to pass a test containing ear-training, keyboard, and basic compositional skills. Qualifying examinations are normally taken in the ninth quarter for students entering with a B.A., and in the sixth quarter, for students entering with an M.A.

The qualifying exam and final dissertation oral examination will occur in an in-person format by default, with the student and all committee members physically present in the exam room. If one or more participants is unable to attend an in-person exam/defense within the appropriate time frame, some or all participants may attend remotely via video conferencing software. The decision to adopt a remote or hybrid modality should be mutually agreed upon by the committee chair and the student, and the student must notify the Graduate Advisor of the change prior to the exam/defense. If the participants cannot reach a consensus regarding the modality, the Graduate Advisor will arbitrate the modality.

4. Dissertation prospectus

Students must write a dissertation prospectus as part of the written qualifying examinations.

Advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D. degree

Students advance to candidacy for the Ph.D. degree once they have passed all coursework and the written and oral qualifying examinations.

Dissertation and final oral examination

A dissertation to be presented as prescribed by the Graduate Council is prepared under the direction of the candidate's dissertation committee. After completion of the dissertation, the candidate may be examined in its defense by the dissertation committee, following the guidelines established above for exam modality (in-person, hybrid, or remote).

Normative time to degree

For students in Digital Composition and Musicology: 15 quarters for students entering with a B.A. degree; 12 quarters for students entering with an M.A. degree. For students in Ethnomusicology: 21 quarters for students entering with a B.A. degree; 15 quarters for students entering with an M.A. degree.

*The descriptions of many courses listed below carry the phrase "or consent of instructor." This is meant to encourage musically qualified students who are not majors to participate in the courses and activities of the department. Nematology is the study of roundworms, the most genetically diverse invertebrate phylum that occurs worldwide in virtually every environment. Only about 3 percent of all species have been studied or identified, and these include significant parasites of humans, animals, and plants. A primary mission of the Department of Nematology is to develop environmentally sound approaches to manage nematodes that worldwide cause nearly $100 billion annual damage to crops. Other objectives are to use nematodes that benefit agriculture and the environment as agents of nutrient cycling and soil fertility and for biological control of some insect pests. Additional objectives focus on nematodes as fundamental models for addressing basic biological questions in genetics, development, and molecular biology. The department offers graduate and postgraduate opportunities in biocontrol, ecology, genetics, molecular biology, physiology, and systematics. It offers specific expertise in applied nematode problems of subtropical and desert agriculture.

A graduate program in Nematology is offered within a broad biological context. Students are enrolled in a more general department or interdepartmental program that provides a core of graduate courses. The general departments may include Botany and Plant Sciences, Entomology, Evolution, Ecology, and Organismal Biology, Microbiology and Plant Pathology, and Environmental Sciences as well as a wide range of interdepartmental programs. Dissertation research opportunities, major research professor, curriculum advisor, and specific courses are provided by the Department of Nematology to complement requirements of the more general department or program.

Major

The Neuroscience major is an intercollege major offered by the colleges of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences and Natural and Agricultural Sciences. It offers upper-division courses that contribute to an academic program emphasizing the functioning of nervous systems at the molecular, cellular, system, behavioral, and cognitive levels. Some of the topics covered include neuroanatomy, neurophysiology, and neurochemistry in humans and other animals; neural mechanisms underlying sensory system function and perception; neural organization of behavior; development of the nervous system; and neural mechanisms of learning and memory.

Both a B.A. and a B.S. degree are offered by each college. When students declare the major, they choose from which college they wish to have their degree awarded. Students whose degrees are awarded by the College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences are advised in and have their records maintained by the Department of Psychology; students whose degrees are awarded by the College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences are advised in and have their records maintained by the CNAS Academic Advising Center. Breadth requirements vary by college; and students must fulfill the breadth requirements of the college they choose.

Graduate Program

The multidisciplinary interdepartmental graduate program in Neuroscience offers instruction and research training leading to the Ph.D. degree in Neuroscience. A Thesis Plan (Plan I) or Non-Thesis Plan (Plan II) M.S. degree in Neuroscience is available under special circumstances, when the work leading to the Ph.D. degree cannot be completed. Whether either of these options is appropriate will be decided by the student's Guidance Committee typically either at the end of the first year, or at the time of the qualifying examination. See General University requirements for Plan I and Plan II M.S. degrees: graduate.ucr.edu/programs.

The goal of this program is to prepare students for careers in research, teaching, industry, and scientific administration. The program is aimed at providing high-quality graduate training for students who come from a variety of undergraduate backgrounds, but share a commitment and an intense interest in nervous system research. Students are expected to learn the fundamentals of neuroscience, starting with the required core sequence, become knowledgeable concerning a range of research methods as taught in neuroscience laboratories and demonstrate capability in original research. Graduate student training reflects the research competence and specialties of the faculty. That is, the specific research training received by a graduate student is the responsibility of the major professor/mentor in whose laboratory the student carries out the research projects leading to the degree. Students benefit from an interdisciplinary training approach, tailored by the major advisor but enriched by the readily available expertise and laboratory facilities of program faculty with backgrounds ranging from chemistry to psychology.

Current UCR Neuroscience faculty have major appointments in several different departments but have a considerable degree of common interest in research problems and techniques. Furthermore, the three chief levels of analysis at which nervous systems are currently studied (molecular/cellular, systems, and behavioral) are more or less evenly represented by the interests and expertise of the faculty. Some faculty, as may be expected, carry out research programs that combine two or more of these levels of analysis. These levels of analysis, which characterize the faculty's research, indicate the breadth of integrated neuroscience at UCR but do not represent "fields of emphasis" in which students are to be trained.

Doctoral Degree

Course Work

Core requirements include:

1. NRSC 200A/PSYC 200A (Cell/Molecular Neuroscience)
NRSC 200B/PSYC 200B (Systems Neuroscience)
NRSC 200C/PSYC 200C (Behavioral Neuroscience)
NRSC 202 (Advanced Methods in Neuroscience)
2. One elective course selected by the student in consultation with the major professor and/or guidance committee. Elective choices are flexible and meant to enhance and strengthen the student's expertise in the research area of interest and with attention given to ultimate career goals. Given the interdisciplinary nature of Neuroscience, courses may be chosen from any program or department. Graduate courses are preferred; undergraduate courses may be used only with approval of the Graduate Advisor (or Program Director). Elective courses should be substantial, although unit requirements are flexible. A course in statistics relevant to the area of research is strongly recommended.
3. During each quarter in academic residence every student enrolls and participates in the Colloquium in Neuroscience (NRSC 287/PSYC 287), and, until passing the oral qualifying examination, every student enrolls in two seminars, Special Topics in Neuroscience (NRSC 289, 2 units), during each year of academic residence. One seminar (NRSC 289) per year is required after the qualifying examination is passed.
4. After completing the course requirements and no later than the ninth quarter in residence, the student is given a two-part qualifying examination, one written and one oral. The oral qualifying exam may be done in person or hybrid (at the discretion of the exam chair). The chairperson and the student must be in person. A minimum of three committee members including the chairperson must be in person. A maximum of two committee members (not including the chairperson) may be online. Student is responsible for ensuring technology is set up regardless of exam modality. Non-UCR external members may be in person or remote. (Staff does not need to be present to assist the student.)

5. Regardless of whether financial support comes from fellowships or research assistantships, etc., students must be teaching assistants for at least two quarters in Neuroscience or related-area courses, such as those taught by their mentors.
6. Within three months of advancement to candidacy, the student must submit a written dissertation proposal to the dissertation committee for comments and approval. Before the dissertation is given final approval, the student must present a public lecture on the dissertation research to faculty and students in the program. Following the public lecture, the student meets with the dissertation committee for an oral defense in accordance with the regulations of the Graduate Division. The final defense may be done in person or hybrid (at the discretion of the exam chair). The chairperson and the student must be in person. A minimum of two committee members including the chairperson must be in person. Only one-committee member (not the chairperson) may be online. Student is responsible for ensuring technology is set up regardless of exam modality. Non-UCR external members may be in person or remote. (Staff does not need to be present to assist the student.)

Professional Development

Graduate students fulfill their professional development training requirements through Teaching Assistantships, Graduate Student Research, and enrollment in NRSC 200 (A, B, and C), 287, 289, 297, 299. Skills developed throughout the program include public speaking; grant and professional writing; research training; responsible conduct of research; pedagogy; scientific interactions and intellectual development; safety training; and community outreach.

Majors

The Department of Philosophy offers a major and minor in Philosophy and a major in Philosophy/Law and Society.

The Philosophy major is designed to introduce students to the important issues and arguments surrounding such subjects as morality, knowledge, the nature of the mind and of the physical world, science, and language. The program provides a rigorous background in the history of Western philosophy, and studies contemporary approaches (both analytic and Continental) to philosophical issues. The B.A. degree in Philosophy prepares students for graduate study in philosophy, and is also excellent preparation for law school. For students interested in a double major, philosophy also serves as an excellent complement to psychology, mathematics, political science, and the natural sciences.

The Philosophy/Law and Society major is open to undergraduate students with junior standing who have completed LWSO 100 with a grade of "C" or higher. The major offers students a means of understanding complex relationships between social institutions and provides a strong basis for graduate studies in areas related to law and philosophy. The Philosophy/Law and Society curriculum is sound background for students planning on pursuing the study of law.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences, Colleges and Programs section.

Major Requirements

The department offers two majors: the traditional Philosophy major, and a Philosophy/Law and Society major.

Philosophy Major

The major requirements for the B.A. degree in Philosophy are as follows:

Fifty-six (56) units of course work in Philosophy including at least 36 upper-division units.

- PHIL 007 or PHIL 007H and PHIL 008 or PHIL 008H
- PHIL 100 or PHIL 101 (Sophomore-Junior Seminar)

- Three courses in the history of philosophy, at least one of which must be in ancient Greek or Roman philosophy. Select courses from PHIL 030 (E-Z), PHIL 120 (E-Z), PHIL 121 (E-Z), PHIL 122 (E-Z); a specific list is provided by the Philosophy Department. Not more than two courses may be from PHIL 030 (E-Z)
- At least two courses in metaphysics, epistemology, or philosophy of language: PHIL 130 through PHIL 152, PHIL 159.
- At least one course in moral and political philosophy: PHIL 108, PHIL 116, PHIL 117, PHIL 119, PHIL 153, PHIL 161 through PHIL 169 (E-Z).

Students are urged to consult the department's undergraduate advisor in preparing their course of study each quarter while at UCR.

Philosophy/Law and Society Major

Major requirements for a B.A. degree in Philosophy/Law and Society are as follows:

- Philosophy requirements (36 units)
  - PHIL 007 or PHIL 007H

  - LWSO 193, Senior Seminar

Note: For sections 2.d) and 2.e) combined, not more than two courses may be taken from the same department. In filling the dual requirements of the major, students may not count more than two courses toward both parts of their total requirements (Philosophy Department requirements and Law and Society requirements). The department has its own Philosophy/Law and Society undergraduate advisor, and each student is urged to consult the advisor in preparing a course of study each quarter while at UCR.

Minor

A student may minor (24 units) in Philosophy by taking either PHIL 007, PHIL 007H, PHIL 008 or PHIL 008H, four upper-division philosophy courses, and one other philosophy course at any level.

Students may also choose to do a Philosophy minor with special emphasis, taking their four upper-division courses from one of the areas listed below:

Track for Distinction in Philosophy

The undergraduate track for Distinction in Philosophy is designed to give qualified upper division students the opportunity to do additional upper division work in Philosophy in a seminar format beyond what is required for the major. It will give students the opportunity and the training to do independent research in Philosophy.

Each Philosophy major in the track for Distinction in Philosophy will be assigned a faculty mentor upon entering the program. Faculty are encouraged to provide more challenging assignments to these students in their upper-division classes (such as term papers, revision of a paper in response to feedback, etc.).

Philosophy students who successfully complete this program are awarded and have posted on their transcript the designation Distinction in Philosophy.

Complete details and an application form are available from the Philosophy Student Affairs Officer.

Prerequisites for the track for Distinction in Philosophy

- Submission of an application during the last quarter of the sophomore year or during the junior year (no later than the last quarter of the junior year).
- Completion of 90 units (junior standing).
- Completion of PHIL 7, PHIL 8, PHIL 100/101, and 2 upper-division courses in Philosophy. Students are encouraged to take the 2 courses in the PHIL 30 series (see below) as early in their major as possible.
- Cumulative GPA of 3.5 in Philosophy

These pre-requisites can be waived by permission of the Department under exceptional circumstances. Inquiries may be directed to the Philosophy Student Affairs Officer.

Requirements for the track for Distinction in Philosophy

This track adds some requirements to the Philosophy major:

- 64 units in Philosophy, of which 48 units must be upper division. (The major requires 56 units, of which 36 units must be upper division.)
- 2 courses in the PHIL 30 series. (These courses count toward the 64 units and the three courses in the History of Philosophy.)
- 2 quarters of either PHIL 193 OR PHIL 193 and PHIL 195 (8 units total). Students in the University Honors Program may substitute 4 units of HNPG 199H for 4 units of Phil 195. (These courses count towards the 64 units. With Department approval, PHIL 193 and PHIL 195 may be applied toward the History of Philosophy, Metaphysics/Epistemology/Philosophy of Language, or Moral/Political Philosophy requirements.)
- To receive Distinction in Philosophy, students must have a cumulative GPA of 3.5 in Philosophy upon completion of the program.

Graduate Program

The Department of Philosophy offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Philosophy.

Admission

All applicants to this program must have completed a bachelor's degree or its approved equivalent from an accredited institution and have attained an undergraduate record that satisfies the standards established by the Graduate Division and University Graduate Council. Applications are accepted for the Fall quarter only. We do not accept terminal MA students. Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System (IELTS) unless they have a degree from an institution where English is the exclusive language of instruction. Additionally each applicant must submit a writing sample and three letters of recommendation, at least two of which must be academic references. All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application.

Upon entering the program, a student is assigned a faculty mentor who consults with the student each quarter to discuss the student's individual course of study, progress in the program, and recent performance. Students also consult the Graduate Adviser regularly to discuss their course of study and progress in the program. In the first year, students (whether they have entered with an M.A. or a B.A.) take three proseminars for first-year graduate students, two in Metaphysics and Epistemology, and one in Moral Philosophy (PHIL 275A, PHIL 275B, PHIL 275C). The proseminars are designed to acquaint first-year students with the current state of discussion in central areas of contemporary philosophy and to impart the skills needed to conduct their own research.

Master's Degree

The Department of Philosophy offers the M.A. degree in Philosophy under Plan II (M.A. Paper).

Course Work

Students must complete, with a grade of "B" or better, course work totaling 48 units of graduate credit in philosophy. Of these, 12 units must be in the three proseminars for first-year graduate students (PHIL 275A-B-C), and an additional 20 units must be taken from PHIL 272A-B-C, 280-283, 284A-B or 285A-B. Up to 16 units may be drawn from PHIL 125, courses in the PHIL 220-266 series, PHIL 290 or PHIL 292 paired with a 100-level course, depending on the student's interests and background. These courses are to be chosen only in consultation with the student's advisory committee and the graduate advisor.

Courses taken on a Satisfactory (S)/No Credit (NC) basis cannot be used to satisfy course requirements.

Students should note that although they need not complete distributional requirements or a language requirement to acquire the M.A. degree, there are strict distributional and language requirements for the Ph.D. degree, as well as a colloquium and professional development workshop requirement (described below under the Ph.D. requirements). Students who expect to continue on in the Ph.D. program must begin to fulfill these requirements immediately upon entering the program if they expect to acquire the Ph.D. degree within the prescribed period of time.

M.A. Logic Requirement

The logic requirement for the M.A. degree is completion of PHIL 124 with a grade of "B" or better. Students may be excused from this requirement if they show sufficient knowledge of logic upon entering the graduate program, as indicated by an optional diagnostic examination administered at the start of each academic year. Students who are unsure about the adequacy of their background are encouraged to take the test for diagnostic purposes.

M.A. Paper

Students select a paper to submit to the graduate advisor as their M.A. paper no later than the end of the spring quarter of their second year. M.A. papers can be seminar papers, revised seminar papers, or any other paper that the student has written (of 25 pages or less). Further information on what constitutes an acceptable paper is available from the graduate advisor.

Upon the submission of this paper, the graduate advisor selects three faculty members to serve as the M.A. committee, which conducts an oral examination on the paper. Normally the oral examination will be completed before the end of the student's second year, but it may be postponed until the fall quarter of the student's third year. Failure to pass the M.A. oral examination after two opportunities constitutes grounds for dismissal from the program. In addition, completion of the M.A. requirements does not guarantee permission to continue in the Ph.D. program.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Philosophy offers the Ph.D. degree in Philosophy.

Admission

Students are invited to continue toward candidacy for the Ph.D. degree on the basis of performance in courses and seminars, satisfactory completion of the M.A. requirements, and the recommendation of the graduate advisor. A student's course of study is supervised by the student's faculty mentor, in consultation with the graduate advisor until the student's dissertation committee is appointed. Students with a master's degree in Philosophy from other universities are eligible for admission. These students must enroll in the first-year proseminars.

Course Work

Students must complete 12 more units in philosophy, with a grade of "B" or better, in addition to the 48 units for the M.A. degree. Of the student's 60 letter-graded graduate units in philosophy, 12 units must be in the area of the history of philosophy, with 4 of these in ancient philosophy, 4 units in addition to the proseminar (PHIL 275A, PHIL 275B) in the area of metaphysics and epistemology, and 8 units in addition to the proseminar (PHIL 275C) in the area of ethics, political philosophy, and aesthetics. Courses that fulfill the History of Philosophy distribution requirement are PHIL 282 and 284 A-B. Depending on the course syllabus PHIL 272 A-B-C, 280, 281, and 290 may fulfill the History of Philosophy distribution requirement. Depending on the course syllabus PHIL 272 A-B-C, 280-282, 284 A-B, and 290 may fulfill the Ancient Philosophy distribution requirement. Depending on the course syllabus all graduate level courses except Phil 291 and 292 may fulfill the Metaphysics and Epistemology distribution requirement. Depending on the course syllabus all graduate level courses except 291 and 292 may fulfill the Ethics, Political Philosophy, and Aesthetics distribution requirement.

Forty of these 60 letter-graded units must be seminars and workshops taken from PHIL 272A-B-C, 275A-B-C, 276, 280-283, 284A-B or 285A-B. (Only 4 letter-graded units of PHIL 276 count towards the 60 letter-graded units of the PhD course requirements.) Up to 20 units may be drawn from PHIL 125 or PHIL 290-292. Students are required to enroll in PHIL 276 three times during their third and fourth years, with the default schedule being twice in the third year and once in the fourth year, although students can petition the graduate advisor for a different schedule if it better suits their advancement through the requirements. One quarter of PHIL 276 must be taken for 4 units on a letter-graded basis. (Students who have advanced to candidacy by the first day of classes of the winter quarter of their fourth year are exempted from a third quarter of PHIL 276.) Seminars from other UC Philosophy Departments via Intercampus Exchange count toward the Ph.D. course and seminar requirements. Graduate seminars in other disciplines (either at UCR or via Intercampus Exchange at another UC campus) may count toward the Ph.D. course and seminar requirements by petition to the Graduate Advisor. Students are in addition expected to take one seminar or workshop each quarter until they advance to candidacy (taken from PHIL 272A-B-C, 275A-B-C, 276, 280-283, 284A-B or 285A-B.) Students can petition the graduate advisor for exemptions from this requirement.

Colloquia and Professional Development Workshop Requirement

Major

The Department of Physics and Astronomy offers two undergraduate degrees: the B.A. and B.S. in Physics.

The B.S. program is designed for students with a strong interest in the sciences or engineering who wish to emphasize this aspect of their education and training. The B.S. degree provides a strong background for students who wish to continue on to graduate school.

The B.A. program follows the liberal arts tradition with a broader coverage of the humanities and social sciences. It is selected often by students who intend to obtain a teaching credential with a specialty in science or to pursue a career combining business management opportunities with a knowledge in science and technology.

The extensive course offerings and modern facilities within the Department of Physics and Astronomy, coupled with close, personal counseling by faculty advisors, provide students with a physics program that is characterized by its breadth and flexibility.

Career Opportunities

Graduates with a bachelor's degree in Physics generally begin their careers in government or industry. Professions include research and development, system modeling and analysis, and sales in a large variety of fields. A Physics degree provides one of the most flexible qualifications with direct applications to materials science, advanced electronics, lasers and microwave devices, computing and communications.

The federal government and national laboratories employ many physicists as do industries in medical and scientific instruments, computers, audio and telecommunications equipment, financial analysis and investments, material science, and engineering.

The bachelor's degree programs in the UCR Department of Physics and Astronomy are well suited for continued education in graduate school and for preparation in technical and professional careers. Colleges or universities, national laboratories, industry, and governmental agencies employ students with graduate training.

Transfer Students

Students transferring to the Physics major must complete courses comparable to the following one-year sequences before they transfer:

1. General physics (calculus-based) equivalent to PHYS 040A, PHYS 040B, PHYS 040C
2. First-year calculus, equivalent to MATH 007A or MATH 009A, MATH 007B or MATH 009B, MATH 009C

Students must have a minimum grade point average of 2.70 in transferable college courses. UCR has articulation agreements with most of the California community colleges. These agreements list specific community college courses that have been designated as comparable to UCR courses (see the statewide articulation Web site at www.assist.org). Transfer students will usually find it advantageous to complete most or all sequences before starting at UCR. All prospective transfers should try to complete the sequences they begin rather than divide a sequence between two campuses.

Undergraduate Curriculum

The Department of Microbiology and Plant Pathology participates in the Microbiology and Botany and Plant Sciences majors leading to the baccalaureate degree. See the Microbiology or Botany and Plant Sciences section of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of Microbiology and Plant Pathology offers the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Plant Pathology.

Admission

In addition to meeting the requirements for admission to the Graduate Division, students typically have a baccalaureate major in a biological science or training equivalent to that given in the Plant Science curriculum of the College of Natural and Agricultural Sciences. Majors in the physical sciences are welcomed, but students must be prepared to augment their undergraduate preparation with courses in the biological sciences.

All candidates for the M.S. or the Ph.D. degree should have good basic preparation in chemistry and biology. It is common for students to have completed courses in biochemistry, organic chemistry, cell and molecular biology, calculus, general physics, general botany, microbiology, statistics, genetics, plant physiology, mycology, and plant pathology. If these courses have been completed as an undergraduate, graduate study is facilitated. If students have not completed these courses prior to admission, they may be required to take them early in their graduate career.

Master's Degree

General university requirements are given in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. The master's degree in Plant Pathology is offered under Plans I or II.

Plan I (Thesis) requires 36 units of upper-division and graduate courses, of which at least 24 must be in the 200 series courses in Plant Pathology or Nematology. A maximum of 12 units may be in graduate research for the thesis.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination) requires 36 units of upper-division and graduate courses, of which at least 18 must be in the 200-series courses in Plant Pathology or Nematology, excluding graduate research for a thesis or dissertation, and a comprehensive final examination in the major subject.

The departmental graduate advisory committee, in consultation with the student's major professor or curriculum advisor, is responsible for prescribing the course of study, which requires as a minimum of PLPA 200, PLPA 206/NEM 206, PLPA 207, PLPA 210, PLPA 234, PLPA 250 and PLPA 265.

Doctoral Degree

In accord with the student's preparation and specific interests, the departmental graduate advisory committee, in consultation with the student's major professor or curriculum advisor, prescribes areas where study is required. In addition to selected subjects in plant pathology, related fields in which some degree of competence may be expected is drawn normally from biochemistry, biology, chemistry, cell and molecular biology, entomology, genetics, genomics, mathematics, microbiology, nematology, plant physiology, soils, and statistics.

The departmental graduate advisory committee, in consultation with the student's major professor or curriculum advisor, is responsible for prescribing the course of study.

Course Work

The course of study requires as a minimum PLPA 200, PLPA 206/NEM 206, PLPA 207, PLPA 210, PLPA 234, PLPA 250 and PLPA 265.

Written and Oral Qualifying Examinations

Students must demonstrate to the departmental graduate advisory committee, by written and oral examination, adequate preparation in the fields fundamental to plant pathology and in any area in which students have placed special emphasis in their training. A written dissertation research proposal is to be prepared before the qualifying examination and defended during the oral examination. After successful completion of the qualifying examination and all other formal requirements to the satisfaction of the dean of the Graduate Division, the student is advanced to candidacy for the Ph.D. degree.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

A dissertation is required of every candidate. The dissertation must be approved by the dissertation committee before the candidate may take the final oral examination. The final oral examination deals primarily with defense of the dissertation and its relation to the field in which its subject lies.

Professional Development Training

Both M.S. and Ph.D. students fulfill their professional development training by enrolling in PLPA 265, a 3-unit course that covers a range of topics including careers in plant pathology, cv preparation, skills on giving scientific presentations, strategies for success in the candidacy examination and graduate school, data acquisition, management and ownership, policy and regulation, as well as intellectual property.

Teaching Requirement

Ph.D. students must fulfill a one-quarter teaching requirement.

Normative Time to Degree 15 quarters

Counseling

Counseling on graduation and departmental requirements and on enrollment is handled in the department office by the student affairs staff.

For more information about the undergraduate programs, call or write the Department of Political Science, (951) 827-5502 or (951)827-5312.

Political Science Major

The study of political science provides undergraduates with career opportunities in law, government service, education, journalism, and business. Because career goals may vary, the department offers two distinct majors. For students planning careers in such areas as law, journalism, or teaching, the traditional major in Political Science is appropriate. For students considering careers in government service, especially for such positions as program and budget analyst, urban planner, and executive or administrative assistant, the appropriate major is the Political Science/Public Service major.

Further information on the study of law or the legal profession may be obtained from the departmental prelaw counselor.

Political Science/Administrative Studies Major

The Political Science/Administrative Studies major combines the disciplinary interests of political science with a particular focus on administrative behavior, tools of decision making, and politics of public policy. The Administrative Studies component provides an interdisciplinary approach to training in administrative analytical skills and, more importantly, to the study of the policies, politics, and theories of public administration. The Business Administration courses provide a variety of perspectives on these objectives. In addition, they should be of particular value to those planning to either enter directly into public administration (federal, state, or local levels) or attend a professional school of administration.

Political Science/International Affairs Major

The Political Science/International Affairs major offers a challenging opportunity to observe and participate in the dynamics of global interaction. As versatile as it is valuable, a degree in international affairs prepares the student for work in many diverse careers in the private sector, government, and academia. From diplomatic missions to the United Nations to intense debate with a private "think tank," careers in international affairs should appeal to students seeking to understand and influence the world in which we live.

Political Science/Law and Society Major

The Law and Society major is open to undergraduate students with junior standing who have completed LWSO 100 with a grade of "C" or higher. The major combines the breadth of a political science major with a particular focus on the theme of law and law-like relationships. The major provides a multidisciplinary approach to the study of legal and law-like institutions and relationships and focuses on relationships that have formed the core of political science: the emergence and development of law, the relationship between law and values, and the growth of the power of the state, among others. The courses provide a variety of perspectives on this theme, and the range of courses should be of particular benefit to those who plan to attend law school.

Political Science/Public Service Major

The Political Science/Public Service major introduces students to knowledge and skills associated with managerial career positions in government, without sacrifice of either a broad knowledge of politics or a liberal arts education.

Model United Nations (MUN)

The Model United Nations (MUN) program is a campuswide activity that combines academic and social aspects. The academic preparation takes place within the Political Science Department, with one course, POSC 142L. The simulation preparation takes place within the UCRMUN organization, for participation in external conferences. Each year, the UCRMUN organization hosts a two-day MUN conference, which attracts over a thousand high school students. In recent years, the UCRMUN High School MUN has been the third largest in the nation. Planning and running this conference is entirely in the hands of UCR students participating in the UCRMUN program. The program provides training in administration and diplomacy. In the spring, a UCRMUN delegation attends either a local conference or the National Model United Nations Conference in New York City.

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

Doctoral Degree

The Department of Political Science offers the Ph.D. degree in Political Science.

The first two years of the program are devoted to course work and preparation for the Ph.D. examination. During this period, students obtain substantive background in the discipline through completion of three graduate courses per quarter. Course work, which will usually continue beyond the second year, includes the following required components:

1. Selecting two major fields of concentration from the five fields listed below.
2. Satisfying course requirements for the major fields, which requires a total of eight graduate courses. (This is the Major Field Requirement; see details below.)
3. Taking one course in each of the three fields of study not selected by the student as a major field. (This is the Distribution Requirement.)
4. Taking three additional graduate courses in any field of study, according to the student's choice, in consultation with the faculty advisors. With permission of the Graduate Advisor, one or more of these courses may be graduate-level courses outside of Political Science. (This is the Depth Requirement.)
5. Students must complete POSC 201, 202A and 203 and at least two additional graduate courses in methods. The two additional courses may include POSC 202B, 204, 205, 207, 225, or other graduate methods courses. One of these may be from outside the Political Science Department, by permission of the Graduate Advisor. (This is the Methods Requirement.)

6. Enrollment in POSC 230. Students must be enrolled in the course during their first year in the program, and subsequently during quarters of their choice, until completion of 10 units, to be completed by the end of their fifth year. Exceptions only by permission of Graduate Advisor. (This is the Professional Development Requirement.)

The major fields may be chosen from among American Politics, Mass Political Behavior, Comparative Politics, International Relations, and Political Theory.

1. Comparative Politics

Students must complete the core course POSC 217 and at least three additional courses in the field.

2. International Relations

Students must complete the core course POSC 216 and at least three additional courses in the field.

3. American Politics

Students must complete the core course POSC 249 and at least three additional courses in the field.

4. Mass Political Behavior

Students must complete a core course, either POSC 255 or POSC 256, and at least three additional courses in the field.

5. Political Theory

Students must complete the core course POSC 212 and at least three additional courses in the field.

One POSC 290 course may be accepted in lieu of a seminar. This limit may be exceeded by permission of Graduate Advisor if course staffing or scheduling problems require it. All POSC 290 courses must have prior approval of the graduate advisor. A POSC 290 course should only be taken if the material to be covered is not available in a scheduled course.

Written Qualifying Examination

Students should ordinarily complete major field course requirements during Years One and Two. In the fall quarter of Year Three, the student continues to enroll in POSC 230, while also enrolling in POSC 291 (Individual Coordinated Study), which is designed to aid preparation for the comprehensive examination. Written examinations in the two major fields are normally taken in the two weeks before the start of the fall quarter of the third year. Postponements to this schedule are allowed in exceptional circumstances; all delays in taking comprehensive examinations must be approved by the Graduate Committee.

Oral Defense of Prospectus

The winter and spring quarters of Year Three and all of Year Four are devoted to Directed Research (POSC 297) to prepare a dissertation prospectus under the direction of the principal advisor; to additional substantive seminars; and to continued participation in POSC 230. The choice of substantive seminars during this time should be made in conjunction with faculty advisors and should usually be applicable either to the distribution or depth requirements, although students may also take courses in excess of these requirements. No later than the fall quarter of Year 5, students are advanced to candidacy upon successful completion of the oral defense of their dissertation prospectus. Oral exams (or prospectus defense) should be completed no later than quarter 13 or fall of year 5.

The Oral Defense of Prospectus (Oral Qualifying Exam) can be taken in any of the following modes: In-Person, Remote, or Hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination. Students completing the defense In-person are expected to present on campus with all committee members physically present. If Remote is chosen, all committee members and student have the option to attend remotely. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video enabled room that supports some members physically present and others remote. At least one member of the committee must be physically present for a Hybrid exam.

Normative time to completion of the program is six years. Additional time is provided if circumstances warrant it. Whether circumstances justify additional time is to be determined by the Graduate Committee, in cooperation with the thesis advisor.

Students who do not complete their degree requirements during this two-year period are closely reviewed on a biannual basis. These reviews are provided by the graduate advisor, after consultation with the dissertation advisor. Until completion of the Ph.D. requirements, each review includes targeted amounts of required progress, to be completed prior to the next review. Students who fail to complete their scheduled work are reviewed by the Graduate Program Committee for a recommendation of termination from the Political Science graduate program.

Normative Time to Degree 18 quarters.

General regulations applying to the dissertation and qualifying examinations are found in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog and in other Graduate Division and department publications.

For further information, contact the graduate advisor, Department of Political Science.

Majors and Career Opportunities

The major in Psychology is designed to give students a broad, general exposure to knowledge in the various areas of psychology and to the methods psychologists use to conduct research. The B.A. degree in Psychology is useful to those students seeking careers in probation and parole, corrections, personnel, industrial relations, mental health work, social work, or positions as trainees in a variety of executive training programs. The degree also prepares students for graduate school in psychology in either M.A. or Ph.D. programs. Such graduate programs prepare students for a variety of career possibilities. Careers include teaching and research positions in community and private colleges and state and other universities as well as career positions such as research psychologist, clinical psychologist, counseling psychologist, and industrial psychologist. For more information, see psych.ucr.edu.

The department offers a minor in Psychology and a major in Psychology/Law and Society.

Transfer Students

Transfer applicants must have a minimum GPA of 2.70. Applicants must also have a minimum of one UC transferable mathematics course equivalent to Math 004 or higher.

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of Psychology offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Psychology; however, applications are not accepted from students wishing to work towards the master's degree only.

Graduate training in Psychology is offered in four major areas: Cognition and Cognitive Neuroscience, Social/Personality, Developmental, and Behavioral Neuroscience.

Admission

Students are normally expected to have completed the equivalent of an undergraduate major in Psychology at the UC, with background preparation in basic science and mathematics.

The Ph.D. degree is a research degree. Students must demonstrate the ability to complete rigorous empirical research and must be active in research throughout their graduate career. The course requirements in the Ph.D. program are directed toward establishing a foundation for critical evaluation of research literature and designing conceptually important empirical research.

Doctoral Degree

Course Work The courses normally required during the first two years include the following:

- PSYC 211; PSYC 212; and PSYC 213 or 214 (Behavioral Neuroscience students take two of the three, as directed by the student's advisor.)
- The appropriate area core:
  - Cognition and Cognitive Neuroscience: Any combination of three courses chosen from PSYC203A, PSYC 203B, or PSYC 203C; and PSYC 233
  - Developmental: PSYC 207A, PSYC 207B, PSYC 207C, PSYC 208
  - Social/Personality: PSYC 225, PSYC 226, PSYC 227
  - Behavioral Neuroscience: NRSC 200A/ PSYC 200A, NRSC 200B/PSYC 200B, NRSC 200C/PSYC 200C
- Five additional courses or seminars selected to provide further study beyond the area core course requirements. Courses or seminars must be 3- or 4-units, and at least one must be a Departmental core course (listed in 2, above) outside the student's area of specialization. The student's adviser and the department graduate adviser must approve the list of courses used to satisfy this further study requirement. Students who have completed graduate-level course work prior to entering the UCR program may request that specific courses be accepted toward the satisfaction of this requirement. This request will be reviewed using procedures and standards typically applied to the approval of courses to satisfy this requirement.
- PSYC 301: Required of all graduate students prior to or concurrent with the first teaching assistant appointment unless waived by petition due to previous experience.

The Psychology Department requires that each student earn a "B" average in the PSYC 211; PSYC 212; and PSYC 213/214 sequence and in the student's area core courses, with no grade lower than a "B-".

In addition, students must be enrolled in the appropriate area of Proseminar every quarter until advancement to candidacy:

Cognition and Cognitive Neuroscience: PSYC 283

Developmental: PSYC 284

Social/Personality: PSYC 285

Behavioral Neuroscience: PSYC 287 or PSYC 289

Progress in the program is formally evaluated in June of each year and informally on a continuing basis by noting participation in class and in research.

All students in the graduate program are held to these requirements whether or not they have taken graduate work at, or hold an M.A. from, another institution. The only exception may be for previously-taken graduate-level course work which is thought to be equivalent to one or more of PSYC 211, PSYC 212, or PSYC 213, or PSYC 214. If a grade of "B" or better was received, and with the approval of the advisor, the student may be tested by a departmental instructor of the course(s) in question. On the basis of the results of the test, the instructor decides if the course can be waived.

Professional Development Requirement

The Professional Development course (PSYC 309B) curriculum satisfies the Professional Development requirement. Topics discussed typically include: interviewing, writing, and oral presentation skills; the academic job market and the job application process; and nonacademic careers

Master's Degree

Although there is not a separate terminal master's program, students may apply for the master's degree at the beginning of the quarter in which they expect to complete the statistical sequence, the appropriate area core, two of the five further study courses, PSYC 301 (see 1, 2, 3, and 4 above), and a minimum of 36 units in graduate status (of which at least 18 must be in graduate course work) and pass an oral comprehensive examination administered by the Psychology Department.

Teaching Experience

Each student must gain experience in a teaching capacity for the equivalent of at least three full quarters. Teaching assistants assist a faculty member in an undergraduate course by preparing and grading examinations, reading papers, lecturing, and conducting discussion and laboratory sections.

Written and Oral Qualifying Examinations

The qualifying examination should be taken during the third year of full-time graduate study. It consists of a written component and an oral examination, and focuses on the subject matter in the student's chosen area of concentration.

A qualifying committee should be nominated early in the third year, and all core and breadth requirements must be completed no later than the quarter in which the qualifying examination is taken.

The Oral Qualifying Exam can be taken in one of the following modes: In-Person, Hybrid, or Remote. The student and their committee chair will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the committee chair making the final determination. Students taking the exam In-Person are expected to present the exam on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the exam on campus in a video-enabled room that supports one or more committee members being physically present and others remote. A remote exam involves all committee members and the student participating via videoconferencing software (e.g., Zoom) with no expectation for physical presence on campus of any meeting participant.

Committee members nominated from outside the UC Academic Senate who participate remotely must have qualifications comparable to a UC Academic Senate member and submit a letter of intention and CV. In addition, strong academic justification for inclusion on the committee must be provided by the Graduate Advisor.

On the basis of this examination (and completion of the core and breadth requirements), the student may pass and be advanced to candidacy for the Ph.D.; fail, and be permitted one retake; be awarded the M.A. (if not previously awarded) but not be advanced to candidacy for the Ph.D.; or not be awarded the M.A. and not be advanced to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Upon successful completion of 1, 2, 3, and 4, passing the qualifying examination, and nomination of the dissertation committee, the Graduate Division sends the student an application for advancement to candidacy.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination:

Students must complete a dissertation on a subject chosen by the candidate, bearing on the principal area of concentration and showing the student's ability in independent investigation. The dissertation committee guides the student in preparing the dissertation and examines the student during the defense of the dissertation.

The Final Dissertation Defense can be completed in one of the following modes: In-Person, Hybrid, or Remote. The student and their committee chair will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the committee chair making the final determination. Students completing the defense in-person are expected to present the Final Defense on campus with all committee members physically present. If Hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to present the Final Defense on campus in a video-enabled room that supports one or more committee members being physically present and others remote. A remote defense involves all committee members and the student participating via videoconferencing software (e.g., Zoom) with no expectation for physical presence on campus of any meeting participant.

Committee members nominated from outside the UC Academic Senate who participate remotely must have qualifications comparable to a UC Academic Senate member and submit a letter of intention and CV. In addition, strong academic justification for inclusion on the committee must be provided by the Graduate Advisor.

Each of the four major areas may have additional requirements. Occasionally, a change in courses used to satisfy specific requirements may be justifiable. For a complete description of the program, visit psych.ucr.edu.

Normative Time to Degree 15 quarters

Optional Specialized Subfield of Study

In addition to pursuing a doctoral degree in one of the core areas of psychology, graduate students may qualify, under the direction of the committee in charge of the relevant Specialized Subfield of Study, for any one or more of three subfields of study: Quantitative Psychology, Health & Well-Being Psychology, and Diversity & Inequality Psychology. Students wishing to pursue a Specialized Subfield of Study should typically pursue one or at most two subfields, as their training interests dictate. Exceptional requests to pursue more than two subfields may be granted by the Graduate Advisor in consultation with the relevant subfield committees and the student's primary advisor. Each Specialized Subfield of Study has the following requirements:

1. Submission of a letter of interest to the chair of the relevant specialized subfield committee, in which the student should articulate their interest in the specialization with regard to its relevance for the student's course of graduate study and the student's longer-term career plans.
2. Enrollment and satisfactory completion of at least three quarters of the relevant proseminar.
3. Satisfactory completion of at least three courses relevant to the relevant Specialized Subfield of Study topic, as approved by the relevant subfield of study committee. No more than two courses used to satisfy a Specialized Subfield of Study requirement may be used to fulfill the general further studies requirement for doctoral study in psychology, and no more than two courses may be used to satisfy the requirements of multiple Specialized Subfields of Study (i.e., at least one course for each subfield must be uniquely applied to that subfield's requirements). The qualifying courses vary from subfield to subfield. However, no core course (i.e., PSYC 200A/B/C, 203A/B/C, 207A/B/C, 208, 225, 226, or 227) may count toward a subfield's requirements. Statistical and methods courses (e.g., 233, 259) are typically not appropriate for these requirements except in the case of the Quantitative Psychology Subfield. Exceptions may be granted by the Graduate Advisor in consultation with the relevant subfield committee and the student's advisor.
4. Successful completion of an oral examination based upon a project completed by the student on a topic relevant to the subfield of study. A three-person faculty committee, approved by the chair of the committee in charge of the relevant subfield of study, must grant prior approval of the topic of the project and conduct the oral examination. No more than two members can overlap between subfield committees for a given student (i.e., at least one member of the evaluating committee must be unique to each Specialized Subfield of Study). The student and the committee determine the format of the oral exam; a presentation in the relevant pro-seminar based on the project satisfies the oral examination requirement.

5. Submission of a form to the relevant subfield of study committee confirming completion of all requirements.

Subfield of Study-specific requirements:

Quantitative Psychology: Further requires completion of PSYC 211; PSYC 212; and PSYC 213 or 214, with a grade of "A-" or better in each course, or passing an examination covering the three courses. The relevant proseminar is PSYC 270.

Health & Well-Being Psychology: Further requires submission of a written paper on the completed project, due to the faculty committee prior to the oral examination. The relevant proseminar is PSYC 286E.

Diversity & Inequality Psychology: Further requires submission of a written paper on the completed project, due to the faculty committee prior to the oral examination. The relevant proseminar is PSYC 286F.

Public Policy

Subject abbreviation: PBPL School of Public Policy

School of Public Policy
Mark Long, MPP, Ph.D., Dean
Bruce Babcock, Ph.D., Associate Dean
Program Office, INTS 4146
(951) 827-5663;
spp.ucr.edu

Major

Public policy analysis is the use of decision-making theory and evidence-based methods to the study of substantive public policy problems. The objective of public policy analysis is to improve the quality of public policy-making by critically examining the design and relevance of public policies, their implementation and execution, and their impact on households, communities, and the society at large. By its very nature, policy analysis is multidisciplinary. For instance, policies to address health problems in society must draw on developments in philosophy, economics, political science, medicine, and ethics (among other disciplines).

Career Opportunities

A degree in public policy equips students to go into a range of different careers. Examples include working as a policy analyst for local, regional, state, or national government agencies; a governmental or public relations officer for a private sector firm; an employee of a public advocacy group; or as a leader of a community-based, non-profit organization.

New Student Seminar

PBPL 050 is a seminar designed for first year and transfer students that meets weekly with several aspirations including community building, orientation to the campus and the major, academic support and career exploration. The goal of this seminar is to set the foundation for the major and the students' experience at UCR. The seminar is for first-year and transfer students admitted in the Fall term. The seminar is recommended, but not required for completion of the degree. The seminar carries 2 units of academic credit and is graded on an "S/NC" basis.

University Requirements

See Undergraduate Studies section.

College Requirements

See School of Public Policy section.

Major Requirements

The major requirements for the B.A. degree in Public Policy are as follows:

Students will not be admitted into the major until they have completed PBPL 001 with a "C" grade or better.

4. Domestic or International Policy Practicum

In the third or fourth year of the program (or during the summer between the third and fourth years), students must undertake a policy practicum (PBPL 198-I), which consists of an internship (paid or voluntary) on a policy issue or problem with a local, state or federal government agency, nonprofit or for-profit organization, a trade association, a labor/trade union, or a public-affairs firm. The Public Policy Program Committee helps students locate internship opportunities. The internship provides students with an opportunity to gain real-world experience and apply the analytical skills learned in the classroom. Students enrolled in the UC Washington Center (UCDC) and UC Center Sacramento (UCCS) programs or the Education Abroad Program can apply that experience toward the policy practicum requirement, and do not need to undertake a separate internship.

5. Senior Thesis (for Honors candidates only)

Students who have an outstanding academic record in their course work during the first three years of the program can become candidates for Honors in Public Policy during the spring quarter of their junior year. All honors candidates must enroll in a two-quarter senior thesis seminar (PBPL 195H) that will culminate in a written thesis covering a real policy problem of the student's choice. The thesis project could grow out of the practicum experience.

Major Robotics Engineering Undergraduate Major

Robotics studies the design, operation, and deployment of autonomous intelligent systems and mechanisms. Robotics is a fundamentally multidisciplinary field, with core components spanning engineering and computer science, and applications extending beyond science and technology. Courses in the B.S. in Robotics Engineering program focus both on the theory and the practice of contemporary robotics science and engineering, and prepare students for professional careers and graduate studies in robotics and beyond (e.g., autonomous systems, intelligent control systems, and decision making).

The B.S. in Robotics Engineering major is an interdepartmental program offered by the Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering (BCOE), and involves the Departments of Mechanical Engineering, Electrical and Computer Engineering, and Computer Science and Engineering. Students are advised in and have their records maintained by the BCOE Office of Student Academic Affairs. Students must fulfill the breadth requirements of the Bourns College of Engineering.

Graduate Program

The Robotics program offers the M.S. degree in Robotics after completion of the following requirements.

Master of Science in Robotics

Admission

All applicants to this program must have completed a Bachelor's degree or its approved equivalent from an accredited institution and to have attained undergraduate record that satisfies the standards established by the Graduate Division and University Graduate Council. Applicants should have at least an undergraduate major in Mechanical Engineering, Computer Engineering, Computer Science, Electrical Engineering or a closely related field. Applicants who fail to meet this criterion may sometimes be admitted with course deficiencies, provided they take remedial steps to cover the deficiencies.

A student who is deficient in a competency area may be asked to complete the corresponding UCR course with a letter grade of at least B, or to pass a challenge examination based on that course's final exam with a grade of at least B. All such remedial work should be completed within the first year of graduate study, and in all cases the deficiency(s) must be corrected BEFORE a student can enroll in any graduate course from the same specialty area. The details will be decided by the Graduate Advisor of the program in consultation with the student.

The Graduate Record Exam, General Test (GRE) is not required to apply for the M.S. Robotics program. Relevant GRE subject tests may be beneficial to the candidate's application, but are not required. Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System (IELTS) unless they have a degree from an institution where English is the exclusive language of instruction. Additionally each applicant must submit letters of recommendation, as per the admission requirements. All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application.

The committee designing the program fully recognizes that students from ME, EE, CEN and CS have different undergraduate training. The program is designed so that all students who have completed their undergraduate degrees in these areas will be able to take these courses. The program also allows for a number of undergrad courses which can be taken to build the fundamentals necessary before the graduate course is taken.

Course Work

The MS in Robotics requires the completion of 40 units of coursework, including a capstone experience. Units are divided among core, focus area, and elective courses. A total of 12 units maximum can be at the undergraduate level, selected from the list of courses below. Colloquium units do not count towards the 40 units.

Professional Development

All M.S. Robotics students must satisfactorily complete a colloquium course every quarter of their study, CS 287, EE 259, or ME 250. The inter-departmental nature of the Robotics program calls for students attending colloquia in multiple departments.

Additionally, students in the program must submit a Professional Development Report that details the students' efforts in developing their technical writing and presentation skills. This report should be submitted to and approved by the program Oversight Committee, as part of the Capstone experience. Specific guidance for this report will be provided by the committee to the students.

Capstone Experience (Plan II)

Students must complete a capstone experience that integrates knowledge from across their course of study by selecting one of the two options below:

- a. Comprehensive Exam Option – Students take a comprehensive exam based on the courses in the program. The faculty committee overseeing the program will coordinate with the individual departments on the logistics of the exam.
- b. Project Option – Students must complete a research project under the guidance of a faculty member. The project will be approved by a committee of at least two faculty members.

Majors

SEHE majors address complex social, medical, and environmental problems with a local and global focus on sustainability, equity, and social justice. Our interdisciplinary majors are grounded in the tools and concepts of the arts, humanities, and social sciences. Majors prepare undergraduate students for high-demand careers and post-graduate study in areas such as health care, health policy, and sustainability, serving the complex and diverse needs of the Inland Southern California region and beyond. Internships, work study, and fellowships, such as the UCR Bonnie Reiss Leading on Climate Fellowship, are available to students.

Environmental Studies Major

Through arts, humanities and social sciences education, this major equips students with knowledge, theory, and skills that advance their contribution to a world in which environmental degradation has become an increasingly significant subject of concern. To gain a deeper understanding of the complex interactions between the workings of human societies and ecological changes, the major engages a range of environmental challenges including climate change, air and water pollution, biodiversity loss, energy demands, toxic accumulations, waste management, deforestation and desertification, food security, and water scarcity as social phenomena, and examines how they intersect with broader societal issues such as environmental justice, policy and governance, history of colonialism, global capitalism, hunger and poverty, structural racism, gender inequality, health inequity, and community resilience. The major also introduces humanities approaches such as critical theory, environmental philosophy, regional history, storytelling, and other creative expressions to enrich students' intellectual relationships with nature and non-human elements. The major emphasizes community engagement as a necessary step in finding solutions for environmental challenges.

This interdisciplinary major will prepare students to make career choices that involve: promoting sustainable practices in various capacities as employees in public services, education, healthcare, or the private sector; joining nonprofit organizations with a focus on issues pertaining to environmental sustainability or social justice; and continuing their career development by pursuing professional and graduate education in sustainability, public policy, urban and regional planning, business, law, and public health. To learn more about the major, please consult this informational video: youtube.com/watch?v=icbAiAk19uc.

Global and Community Health Major

The major equips students with the knowledge, theory, and skills necessary to understand health disparities and promote the goal of health equity. Drawing on courses primarily in the arts, humanities and social sciences with an explicit framework of delivering health justice - fair and just health opportunities to everyone - this interdisciplinary field transcends traditional biomedical approaches to provide a historically-grounded, multi-level understanding of health and illness, systems of healing, and evidence-based solutions to global health inequities. Global and Community Health students learn to think critically about complex issues that affect health, healthcare, and health policy. The major investigates how political, economic, demographic, cultural, social, and biological factors interact to produce health (in)equities. The major prepares students for a wide range of careers and postgraduate study, including public service in healthcare, public health, social work, policy advocacy, consulting, research, and non-profit organizations focused on health and equity. Through in-depth, engaged learning experiences, the major nurtures community leaders and global citizens who can meet the global and community health challenges of the 21st century. To learn more about the major, please consult this informational video: youtube.com/watch?v=YQFL-97yaV8.

Students interested in pursuing a health profession (such as medicine, nursing, or public health) should consult the CHASS Pre-Health Pathway Checklist and meet with a Health Professions Advising Center advisor as early as possible.

Majors

Sociology is the scientific study of human behavior, interaction and organization. It provides a historical and comparative perspective on human societies and offers a framework for understanding society and the complex social world.

Students majoring in sociology can choose between a B.A. or B.S. degree. The department also offers majors in Sociology/Administrative Studies, and Sociology/Law and Society; as well as a minor in sociology. All students must meet quarterly prior to course enrollment with the student affairs officer or the undergraduate advisor to develop a program of studies.

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of Sociology offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Sociology. The graduate program in Sociology is designed to prepare students for research and teaching careers in the discipline of sociology. The graduate program is designed as a full-time course of study for students seeking the Ph.D. degree. The M.A. degree in Sociology is awarded as part of a student's required progress toward admittance into the Ph.D. program in Sociology. The Department of Sociology does not award an M.A. degree to a student who already received an M.A. degree in Sociology from another institution.

Doctoral Degree

Admission

Admission into the graduate program is based on the following criteria:

1. Prior academic performance, especially in undergraduate or graduate Sociology classes
2. Letters of reference from persons familiar with an applicant's potential for achieving academic excellence
3. The extent to which an applicant's areas of expressed interest coincide with teaching and research emphases in the department
4. A writing sample: a professional or term paper
5. Record of overcoming adversity and contributions to diversity
6. Motivation to study, passion for, commitment to, and creativity in sociology

In general, students are admitted for the fall quarter of each academic year. Applicants to the graduate program for mid-year admissions are not recommended because the sequence of core courses is designed to begin with the fall quarter. The deadline for an application for admission for the fall quarter is December 5, also the deadline for various university fellowship programs. A detailed statement of degree requirements and procedures for the graduate degree is available at <https://sociology.ucr.edu/prospective-grad-student-info/>. General university requirements of the Graduate Division are at graduate.ucr.edu and in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog.

The graduate program is designed to allow students to proceed through three distinct stages in their pursuit of the Ph.D. degree: the basic core program, the period of specialization, and writing the dissertation.

Basic Core Program

All students must complete the basic core program, regardless of whether they hold a baccalaureate or master's degree at the time of admission. A student is expected to complete the basic core program in not less than three and not more than six academic quarters. The chair of the graduate affairs committee advises students about the core program.

Format for Defenses and Oral Exam

As explained below, the department requires an MA thesis defense, an oral exam, and a dissertation defense. The department will allow any of the following formats for the defenses and exam: in person, hybrid, and remote. The student's committee chair will decide the format, taking into consideration the preferences of the student and committee members. In the case of hybrid exams, 1) anyone (student or committee member) can be in person and anyone can be online; and 2) the student, if participating in person, may participate without anyone else present in person.

M.A. Thesis and Oral Examination

Each student must complete a thesis for completion of the master's degree. This paper reflects the student's areas of theoretical and substantive interest since entrance into the program, and it is written in a form, content, and style appropriate for publication. A three-person faculty committee oversees the evaluation of the paper and the oral defense of the thesis. See Format for Defenses and Oral Exam section above for details on the format for the defense. The thesis must be completed and presented to the full department by the end of the student's sixth quarter of enrollment. If a student does not possess a Sociology MA from another institution and wishes to apply for the MA degree at UCR, the thesis must be submitted electronically to the Graduate Division, following the formatting guidelines provided on the Graduate Division web page. The normative time to an MA degree is 2 years.

On the basis of a favorable recommendation from the three-person faculty committee, the faculty votes to recommend the awarding of the M.A. degree in Sociology. If the M.A. is awarded or if the student already has an M.A. in Sociology, the faculty then votes on whether the student should continue in the Ph.D. program. If a student is allowed to continue in the Ph.D. program, the faculty then votes on whether to accept the two areas of specialization in which the student requests to be examined.

Professional Development Training

Each student must complete the following professional training courses: Soc 232 and Soc 293. Normally Soc 232 (Proseminar in Sociology) is completed in the fall of the first year as part of the core program. Soc 293 (Research Topics in Sociology) is required in the first year. In addition, Sociology 301: Directed Studies in the Teaching of Sociology is required prior to or concurrent with the completion of teaching assistantships in the program.

Period of Specialization

After admission to two areas of specialization (see M.A. Thesis and Oral Examination, above), students must complete coursework and qualifying examinations in two (one primary and one secondary) areas of specialization. A student must complete specialization coursework with a grade of "B" or better in each course. Other graduate-level courses may be used to fulfill this requirement with Graduate Affairs Committee approval. The areas of specialization offered in the department, and course requirements in these areas, are as follows:

1. Criminology and Sociolegal Studies

SOC 249. Two (if primary) or one (if secondary) of the following SOC courses: 264F, 268, 278, 279, 280E, 280F, 280G, 280I, 280J, 280K, 280M, 280S.

2. Gender Studies

Two (if primary) or one (if secondary) of the following SOC courses: 240, 256, 262, 264E, 264F, 264G, 264M, 264P, 264T, 268, 285N.

3. Medical Sociology

5. Political Economy and Global Social Change

Two (if primary) or one (if secondary) of the following SOC courses: 243J, 243K, 243S, 251, 252, 255M, 257E, 255N, 257J, 258, 261, 263, 264M, 264P, 264T, 265J, 271, and 282. 258 can be taken to fulfill the specialization requirement or the advanced methods requirement, but not both. SOC 259 and SOC 260 are two unit courses that can be combined to substitute for one of the four unit courses listed above.

6. Race and Class Inequality

SOC 246. Two (if primary) or one (if secondary) of the following SOC courses: 265F, 265I, 265J, 265R, 266, 267, 268, 271, 282. ETST 221 and ETST 245 also satisfy this requirement when taught by Dr. Mirandé.

7. Social Psychology

SOC 248. Two (if primary) or one (if secondary) of the following SOC courses: 285E, 285F, 285G, 285I, 285J, 285K, 285N, 285S.

A student's program must include at least one academic quarter of classroom teaching experience at the college level. In addition, students must take one course in any area of specialization and at least one course (or the equivalent, 4 units) of advanced methods from within the department (SOC 205, SOC 206, SOC 208, SOC 258) with a grade of "B" or better in each course. Students must also give one additional research presentation (to the presentation of the MA) as part of the department colloquium series at some point in Years 3 through degree completion. All required coursework must be completed by the end of year three (9th quarter).

Examination Sequence

1. Standing committees composed of faculty in each area administer the written qualifying examination in the student's primary and secondary areas of specialization. A student must complete written examinations in each area of specialization before the end of the fourth year of graduate study. Note In lieu of an exam in a secondary specialization, a student may produce, during the student's residence in the program, a soloauthored paper that has been published or accepted for publication as a peer-reviewed article or book chapter that fits the secondary specialization, as determined by the chair of the secondary specialization committee. If the MA thesis for the program is ultimately published, this published piece cannot count as the published paper for the secondary specialization.
2. Upon completion of 1) the two written area examinations, 2) the selection of a dissertation committee approved by the graduate advisor, and
3. a dissertation proposal, the student must complete and pass an oral examination covering the areas of specialization and the dissertation proposal. The oral examination is conducted by a committee of at least five faculty members, including 1) at least one faculty member from each of the two specialization areas, 2) three members of the student's dissertation committee (who may also represent the areas of specialization), and 3) one "outside member" from another department representing the faculty as a whole. See Format for Defenses and Oral Exam section above for details on the format for the oral exam.

Students who pass the oral examination and all course requirements are advanced to candidacy for the Ph.D. degree.

Dissertation and Final Oral Examination

The dissertation is normally completed within one year after advancement to candidacy. After the dissertation is prepared according to the rules and format of the Graduate Division and signed and approved by a student's dissertation committee, an oral defense of the dissertation is held. See Format for Defenses and Oral Exam section above for details on the format for the defense. The defense may be waived in exceptional circumstances. The dissertation must be filed electronically with the Graduate Division.

Normative Time to Degree for the PhD is 6 years, inclusive.

Graduate Program

The Master's Program in Southeast Asian Studies is an interdepartmental program centered on the study of the arts and cultures of Southeast Asia and its diasporas. To understand Southeast Asia as a region, students need to make sense of and engage with its diverse expressive forms of culture (including visual arts, literature, and performance) which are crucial in building and maintaining individual as well as group identity both within and across national or ethnic boundaries.

This program is designed for students with a strong interest in Southeast Asia, including those already admitted or enrolled in another graduate program. Students can be concurrently enrolled in both the Southeast Asian Studies M.A. program and another graduate degree program. Students may also apply concurrently for the Southeast Asian Studies M.A. - Ph.D. Track in Anthropology, Comparative Literature, Ethnic Studies, History or Music.

Admission

All applicants must fulfill the standard admission requirements as established by the Graduate Division. Additionally, applicants must submit a Statement of Purpose to indicate a serious interest in Southeast Asian Studies (or a specific country or area in this region) as well as a writing sample (such as a past term paper or course essay) to demonstrate basic skills of scholarship.

Foreign Language

Students must acquire (or increase) a distinct level of proficiency in at least one language relevant to Southeast Asian Studies prior to beginning research for the thesis and no later than the fifth quarter in the program. The required proficiency can be demonstrated by way of an exam, by completing one year of course work with a "B" or better, or by alternate certification, including completion of an approved intensive summer language program. International students from Southeast Asia may use their native language to fulfill this requirement.

Course Work

All students are required to pass the Proseminar in Southeast Asian Studies (ANTH 202/CPLT 200/SEAS 200) with a "B" or better. Additionally, students must pass (with a "B" or better) a graduate level seminar in four of the following six areas (any 100-level course must be paired with SEAS 292):

- 1. Southeast Asian performance
ANTH 126/AST 123/DNCE 123/MUS 123,
ANTH 176/AST 127/DNCE 127/ETST 172/MUS 127, AST 119/MUS 119, AST 124/MUS 124
- 2. Southeast Asian religions
ANTH 257/ RLST 253/ SEAS 202, RLST 111, RLST 150/SEAS 150, RLST 200B, RLST 252
- 3. Southeast Asian cultures

- 5. Literatures of Southeast Asia
SEAS 205/CPLT 205, AST 163/CPLT 163/SEAS 163, AST 167/CPLT 167/SEAS 167
- 6. Media in Southeast Asia
SEAS 206, AST 187/MCS 167/SEAS 177, CPLT 173U/MCS 173U

In addition, students can select four other graduate seminars or approved upper division undergraduate courses in accordance with their main field of interest and after approval by the Graduate Advisor and the student's Thesis Committee. A total of 40 units of coursework, including thesis, are required for the degree in Southeast Asian Studies.

Students concurrently enrolled in another graduate program may, when appropriate, include units earned in that program toward the 40 units of the M.A. in Southeast Asian Studies. However, there must be at least 36 units uniquely applied to the Southeast Asian Studies degree.

Plan I (Thesis)

Students enrolled in the Southeast Asian Studies Graduate Program (for the terminal M.A.) who choose the thesis option must submit an essay (thesis) of 50-70 pages reflecting original research, written under the supervision of a member of the program who also functions as the chair of their Thesis Committee. At the beginning of the second year students should write a research proposal outlining their research project. Approximately ten pages in length this proposal should describe the aims of the research and provide a broader theoretical framework. After this is approved students begin to conduct individual research in the field or in the library. Students must enroll in a minimum of 4 units of Thesis Study (SEAS 299) or Directed Research (SEAS 297) under the supervision of a Southeast Asian Studies faculty. Before filing the thesis with the Graduate Division students must pass a formal oral examination or defense.

Plan II (Comprehensive Exam)

- Students enrolled in the Southeast Asian Studies Graduate Program (for the terminal M.A.) who choose the comprehensive examination must submit a final project made up of two components: a) participation in community activism, volunteer work, or an internship; b) a written report of 25-30 pages. Students must enroll in a minimum of 4 units of Directed Research (SEAS297) under the supervision of a Southeast Asian Studies faculty who also functions as the chair of their Comprehensive Exam Committee. The student's coursework, activism or internship experiences, and written report will be the basis for a comprehensive oral exam. Students must submit the written report to their adviser and exam committee members before the exam. Students must pass the comprehensive exam in order to receive their M. A. degree.
- Students concurrently enrolled in another degree program requiring an M.A. thesis may (with the approval of the Southeast Asian Studies faculty) be awarded the M.A. degree by passing a comprehensive oral examination on the basis of that thesis connected to Southeast Asia and its diasporas.

Concurrent Enrollment

Concurrent Enrollment students are enrolled in both the M.A SEAS program and a Ph.D. program in a cooperating department. These students must complete the following 40 units to earn the degree:

- 20 units of core courses, listed above, unique to SEAS program.
  - SEAS 200
  - 4 courses from the 6 above areas
- 16 elective units can be from the home Ph.D. program with the approval of SEAS faculty.

4 units in either SEAS 297 or 299 toward completing the comprehensive exam or thesis.

M.A. – Ph.D. Track

M.A. – Ph.D. Track students are in the M.A SEAS program and have been preliminarily accepted to a Ph.D. program in a cooperating department. These students must complete the following 40 units to earn the degree:

- 4 units in SEAS 299 toward completing the thesis.

Continuation in the Ph.D. program is not guaranteed, but subject to review by the cooperating department. After completion of the M.A. in Southeast Asian Studies, M.A. – Ph.D. track students will need to reapply through Graduate Admissions (fee waived) to the cooperating department for approval and official admission into the Ph.D. program.

The minor in Speculative Fiction and Cultures of Science explores intersections among speculative fiction, science and technology studies (STS), and traditions of speculative thought. We study the pervasive role of speculative discourses in public culture, investigating the complex and reciprocal exchanges among futuristic discourses, research agendas, public policy decisions, media texts, and daily life in technologically saturated societies. Using the combined perspectives of cultural studies and STS helps students develop critical literacy about their media-dominated landscape through which to understand its discourses of science and the future. Bringing speculative fictions and STS into dialogue, our scholars focus on understanding technological change in specific contexts by analyzing the texts and practices that have responded to, critiqued, and build upon the ways science shapes our cultural, material, and economic milieu. Speculative thinking and speculative fictions are central to many of the most compelling contemporary research concerns, such as the Anthropocene, climate change, genetic engineering, and discourses of the posthuman. We examine the histories and cultures of science, technology, and medicine to understand the role culture plays in the production of science and the reciprocal way changes in science and technology shape culture. Our program uniquely emphasizes the role of popular culture and the genres of speculative fiction, in particular, for serving as an imaginative testing ground for technological innovation, articulating hopes and anxieties regarding technological change, and mediating public understandings of science and its applications.

Major

The Department of Statistics is concerned with teaching, research, and statistical consulting. The courses offered present a comprehensive spectrum of statistical and probability theory, in so far as such theory is necessary for the understanding and analysis of observational data. The applications of the theory delineated in the courses may be made in any field of experience. Laboratory classes in which examples related to the student's actual field of interest are worked out, play an essential part. The department offers both B.A. and B.S. degrees in Statistics as well as a B.S. in Statistics with options in Statistical Computing and Quantitative Management; the M.S. degree in Statistics; and the Ph.D. degree in Applied Statistics.

The courses STAT 004, STAT 008, STAT 010, STAT 011, STAT 104/BUS 104, STAT 110, STAT 130, STAT 140, STAT 146, and STAT 155 are intended for students of other departments who wish a knowledge of statistical techniques. Some of them may be taken as electives by statistics majors. The objective of these courses is to acquaint the student with the elements of statistics with only the necessary amount of mathematical training.

The courses STAT 107, STAT 157 and STAT 167 are computer-oriented courses intended for students who would like to learn about computer programming in the most important languages and who would like to learn about statistical computing.

Computing Laboratories

The department has two large undergraduate Windows-based teaching laboratories. These laboratories provide users access to a wide variety of statistical software packages including SAS, R, Minitab, and SPSS, and other popular software packages including Mathematica, Adobe Acrobat, and Microsoft Office. The department also houses the Garber Research Computing Laboratory, which is a combination of a UNIX/LINUX-based system with multiple workstations and several Windows-based machines.

Statistical Consulting Center

The Statistical Consulting Collaboratory provides a broad range of analytical and statistical support services, including design of experiments, statistical inference, hypothesis testing, and data modeling for the campus community, and promotes cooperative research between statisticians and other investigators in all fields of the application of statistics. The Collaboratory is staffed by:

Joint B.S.+1 Statistics M.S. Program

The College of Natural and Agricultural Science offers a combined B.S.+1 Statistics M.S. program, designed to allow successful B.S. graduates who have taken some graduate level statistics courses in their senior standing year in UCR to complete the Master of Science degree in Statistics in one year, by allowing up to 12 units of graduate level coursework taken in UCR as an undergraduate to be counted towards the MS degree requirements.

A student should apply for the B.S.+1 Statistics M.S. program (including transfer students) before the start of their senior standing year. To apply, the student must have a cumulative GPA at least 3.0 overall, 3.3 GPA in the statistics major, and have completed STAT 160ABC with GPA at least 3.3 in STAT 160ABC sequence.. These are minimum requirements and do not guarantee the admission. The application to the B.S.+1 M.S. program must include a transcript, and at least two recommendation letters. Submission of GRE scores with the application is recommended but not required. During students' senior year, students must apply via the Graduate Division for the M.S. portion. Matriculation into the graduate portion of the B.S.+1 M.S. program occurs in the Fall term following their final year, provided: (a) the M.S. application is accepted, (b) throughout the final undergraduate year at UCR the student has a cumulative GPA 3.0 or higher, (c) by the end of senior standing year, the student completes the B.S. degree requirements.

Incoming freshman students who apply to the Statistics B.S. program may simultaneously apply for preliminary conditional admission into the B.S.+1 Statistics M.S. program provided their high-school GPA is at least 3.6, they satisfy the Entry-Level Writing requirement prior to matriculation, and they are eligible to enroll in or to receive credit for MATH 7A or MATH 9A upon arrival or in their first quarter.

Preliminary conditional admission status is maintained as long as the student is a Statistics B.S. student in good standing with a cumulative GPA of at least 3.0. Conditionally admitted students still need to apply for full admission by the start of their senior standing year as described above and apply via the Graduate Division for the MS portion. Continuing undergraduate students who meet the above criteria may apply to the program by submitting a petition and should confer with their staff advisor for details.

To earn the MS degree, students are required to complete a minimum of 41 units that must include STAT 201A, 201B, 201C, STAT 202A, 202B, 202C, STAT 207, STAT 208, STAT 288, and two quarters of STAT 293, and pass the written exam. No more than 12 units earned prior to matriculation to graduate status can be applied towards the MS degree requirements. The courses that can be double counted must be graduate level courses and be eligible to be counted as electives in the B.S. requirements. Students receive credit toward the 41 units by completing STAT 201ABC (recommended) or some other graduate level courses, approved by the graduate advisor, as an undergraduate senior.

Comprehensive Examination

All M.S. students are required to take a written comprehensive examination and pass at the M.S. level, with no more than two attempts allowed to pass. A program proposal is not required.

Advancement to Candidacy

Advancement for the master's candidacy occurs at the beginning of the quarter the student plans to graduate.

Professional Development

Students in the Statistics B.S.+1 M.S. Program must register two quarters of STAT 293, which give students training in (a) the ability to use fundamental statistical techniques to formulate problem and solution in diverse real-world application; (b) the ability to use at least one statistical software package to conduct statistical data analysis; (c) the ability to communicate with researchers in statistical community and other disciplines by using graphical methods to display and interpret information.

Normative time

The normative time to B.S. is four years, and the normative time of the MS portion is one year (five years total).

Graduate Programs

The Department of Statistics offers the M.S. degree in Statistics and the Ph.D. degree in Applied Statistics.

Admission

Domestic and international applicants must supply scores from the GRE general exam. In addition, TOEFL scores must be supplied by applicants whose first language is not English who do not hold a degree from a U.S. institution. The department considers applications for teaching assistantships at the same time as those for fellowships. Normally, Ph.D. eligible admitted students are awarded five year financial assistantship.

Master's Program

The Department of Statistics offers the M.S. degree in Statistics.

Admission

Students entering the Master's program must have completed a bachelor's degree with sufficient training in Mathematics and a strong background in Statistics or have taken STAT 160A, STAT 160B, STAT 160C, STAT 161 and STAT 169, STAT 170, STAT 171, covering basic areas of probability and statistics.

Students must also meet the other requirements for admission as specified by the Graduate Division. The program is Plan II (Comprehensive Examination) described in the Graduate Studies section of this catalog. No foreign language is required.

Course Work

Graduate students in Statistics must have taken appropriate courses in Mathematics to give them the proper background for graduate work in Statistics. Important areas include Calculus (at least MATH 009A, MATH 009B, MATH 009C, and MATH 010A) and Linear Algebra (at least MATH 131).

Degree Requirements

Each student must complete 41 units of coursework that must include STAT 201ABC, STAT 202ABC, STAT 207, STAT 208, STAT 288, and two consecutive quarters of STAT 293.

Our MS program is course-based, so the completion of oral qualifying exams and thesis defense are not required by our MS program.

Comprehensive Examination

All M.S. students are required to take a written comprehensive examination and pass at the M.S. level, with no more than two attempts allowed to pass. The written qualifying exam is offered two times in each year, the first in Summer and the second in Fall quarter. All students in the program are required to take their first attempt of the exam in Summer. The second exam in Fall can only be taken by the students who fail to pass the exam in their first attempt. Exceptions can be made based on the approval of Graduate Advisor. A program proposal is not required.

Advancement to Candidacy

Advancing to candidacy takes place when students complete all the course requirements and pass the written exam.

Professional Development Requirement:

Two quarters of STAT 293 give students training in (a) the ability to use fundamental statistical techniques to formulate problem and solution in diverse real-world application; (b) the ability to use at least one statistical software package to conduct statistical data analysis; (c) the ability to communicate with researchers in statistical community and other disciplines by using graphical methods to display and interpret information.

Petition to Change Degree Objective

Some students can petition to change their degree objective from the M.S. degree to the Ph.D. program in Applied Statistics depending on their performances in the written comprehensive exam and coursework.

The Master of Science in Business Analytics (MSBA)

The Master of Science in Business Analytics (MSBA) program is designed to extend the training of students with analytical backgrounds in business or statistics to allow them to apply their skills to business data. Increasingly large amounts of data are available about customers, costs, and suppliers, which can be analyzed to improve operations, increase the yield on marketing programs and understand pricing and financing better, which all add to the value of the business.

The MSBA interdepartmental program is offered by the School of Business and the Department of Statistics. Depending on the curriculum track, the degree requires 48 to 49 units of study, which can be done as a full-time one-academic-year program or over a longer period on a part-time basis.

Admission

To ensure that students have the prior knowledge to succeed in the program, admission is limited to applicants who have studied statistics or another quantitative discipline such as mathematics, physics, engineering, computer science, or economics or another quantitative discipline such as mathematics, physics, engineering, computer science, or economics or a quantitative business discipline (such as operations, finance and marketing) as undergraduates. Applicants to the program must have completed a bachelor's degree or its approved equivalent in one of these four disciplines. Students who have weaker statistical training but otherwise show promise will be required to take STAT 171 or similar courses before entering the program. Applicants who do not have an undergraduate degree in statistics or one of the quantitative business disciplines may be considered for admission if they provide sufficient evidence of appropriate training.

Applicants must have received their undergraduate degrees from an accredited institution, and have attained a record that satisfies the standards established by the Graduate Division and University Graduate Council.

All applicants must submit scores from the Graduate Management Admissions Test (GMAT) or Graduate Record Exam, General Test (GRE). Applicants whose first language is not English are required to submit acceptable scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) or the International English Language Testing System (IELTS) unless they have a degree from an institution where English is the exclusive language of instruction. Additionally, each applicant must submit at least two letters of recommendation, at least one of which must be an academic reference. All other application requirements are specified in the graduate application or in the General UCR catalog.

Course Work

Once admitted, students follow one of three tracks:

- Statistics Academic Track (48 units)
- Business Academic Track (48 units)
- Practicum Track (49 units)

The statistics academic track and the business academic track offer alternative academic preparation pathways. The practicum track augments either of those academic tracks with a one-unit internship. The statistics academic track is for students who studied a quantitative discipline other than statistics or one of the business disciplines as undergraduates (finance, operations, or marketing) and the business academic track is for students who focused on statistics as undergraduates. Students opting for the third practicum track will follow either the statistics or the business track depending on their academic background as described above, and in addition, are required to undertake an internship (MGT 298I – 1 unit) to fulfill track requirements. All tracks culminate in a two-quarter capstone class that applies their understanding of business analytics to a project.

Major

The Department for the Study of Religion provides an opportunity for students to interrogate religion, as a subject always entangled with ethnicity, politics, economics, gender, class, sexuality, and race. With a degree in the study of religion, students examine how religious life is mediated by practice, materiality, language, the senses, embodiment, and culture. The study of religion is interdisciplinary, and students engage in social scientific, cultural, and historical interpretive methods, among others, to study a broad spectrum of the world's religious traditions. Majoring in the study of religion can be an excellent preparation for a variety of careers, such as law, bioethics, human services, business, medicine, education, social work, writing, and the arts.

The study of religion at UCR develops in students a variety of valuable and transferable skills. These include disciplined attention to the facts (texts, ideas, history, behavior), critical reflection and analysis about claims of meaning and value and about assumptions and methods used in the study of religion, and descriptive and analytical writing about religious history, ideas, motivations, practices, and ethical concerns. A minor in Religious Studies is also a productive way to couple interests in such areas as political science, sociology, medicine, psychology, and law with the ethical and cultural contexts in which such fields are enmeshed. Students are encouraged to consult with the department chair and other faculty about their questions and interests.

Education Abroad

Education Abroad is an excellent opportunity to learn more about another country and its culture while taking courses to earn units toward graduation. Students should plan study abroad well in advance to ensure that the courses taken fit with their overall program at UCR. Consult the departmental student affairs officer for assistance. For further details, visit Education Abroad at ea.ucr.edu or call (951) 827-4113.

See Education Abroad in the Educational Opportunities section in the beginning of this catalog.

Graduate Program

The Department of Religious Studies offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Religious Studies.

The graduate program in Religious Studies instructs students in the critical academic religious studies. The Ph.D. program focuses on preparing students to enter into academia as researchers and university instructors in a specific field of expertise.

Admission

Although an undergraduate major in religious studies is not required for admission into the graduate program, applicants should demonstrate significant interest and background in the critical academic religious studies and the appropriate scholarly approaches to religious studies. Applicants to the M.A. and Ph.D. programs must demonstrate scholarly acuity, as well as interest in the critical questions of the discipline of religious studies. Given the broader scope of the M.A. program, applicants to this degree program do not need to specify a particular field of study or concentration they wish to pursue in the program. Applicants to the Ph.D. program, however, should indicate in their applications the current direction of their interests with regard to a specific Ph.D. concentration and field of study.

Master's Degree (M.A.)

The Department of Religious Studies offers two programs of study leading to the M.A. degree (Plan I and Plan II).

Course work

All M.A. students must complete a minimum of 36 units for the degree, including specific course requirements as follows:

1. RLST 201: Thinking about Religion: Classic Theories in the Religious Studies
2. RLST 202: Contemporary Theories and Theorists in the Religious Studies
3. At least 16 additional units at the 200 level in Religious Studies. With approval from the Director of Graduate Studies, 200-level courses in related departments may also fulfill this requirement.
4. Professional development requirement: All M.A. students are required to take three units of the Colloquium in Religious Studies and one unit of additional 400-level coursework in religious studies.
5. The remaining 12 units may be taken as 200-level courses, or as 100-level courses taken in conjunction with RLST 292: Concurrent Studies in Religious Studies. Any RLST course at these levels may fulfill this requirement, and with approval from the Director of Graduate Studies, courses at these levels in related departments may also fulfill this requirement.

Capstone: M.A. Plan I

In addition to the coursework listed above, Plan I M.A. students must prepare a Master's thesis of publication length (typically 25-30 pages) that presents original research and analysis relevant to the field of religious studies under the supervision of a thesis committee.

Capstone: M.A. Plan II

In addition to the coursework listed above, Plan II M.A. students must successfully complete a final master's project under the supervision of a master's committee. Students have some flexibility in the nature of this project, which may take the form of a single, comprehensive written examination designed by the master's committee in consultation with the student, or an applied project suitable for the student's future career goals.

Students planning to complete the Ph.D. must complete the M.A. Plan I.

Language Requirement

Students must demonstrate reading proficiency in a language other than English that is relevant to their interests in religious studies; the department must approve the choice of language prior to completion of the language requirement. If a language is primarily used in spoken form, then spoken proficiency must be demonstrated instead of written proficiency. If there is no clear choice of language for a student's interests (e.g. in the case of a student whose interests lie primarily with theoretical approaches stemming from Anglophone theorists), then the student should select either French or German. This requirement can be fulfilled through a departmental examination of written and/or spoken proficiency, by passing a designated language course (e.g. FREN 009A, FREN 009B, GERM 002R), or by alternative certification (such as a diploma from a foreign language institute).

Normative Time to Degree 6 quarters.

Doctoral Degree (Ph.D.)

Coursework

The following courses are required for all Ph.D. students:

1. RLST 201: Thinking about Religion: Classic Theories in the Study of Religion
2. RLST 202: Contemporary Theories and Theorists in the Study of Religion
3. One of the following core courses, as appropriate for the student's chosen concentration:
  - a. RLST 203: Hermeneutics and History
  - b. RLST 204: Analytics of Power
  - c. RLST 205: Transnational Religions
4. One course in research methods relevant to the student's area of interest. The following courses may fulfill this requirement:
  - a. RLST 231: Ethnographic Methodology
  - b. RLST 263: Historiography of Sikh Hermeneutics
  - c. With the approval of the Director of Graduate Studies, methods courses in related departments at the 200-level (or the 100-level accompanied by 292: Concurrent Enrollment)
5. Professional development requirement Six units of 400-level professional development courses in religious studies, including four units of Religious Studies colloquium and two other units from RLST 400 level courses of their choice.

Concentration

Ph.D. students must select one of the following concentrations, and are expected both to take the associated core course and to focus aspects of their doctoral exams and their dissertation on this theme:

- Hermeneutics and History
- Analytics of Power
- Transnational Religions

M.A. in Religious Studies degree for Ph.D. students

Students entering the Ph.D. program without an M.A. in Religious Studies may apply for the M.A. degree after they have completed the requirements for the M.A. Plan I.

Sixth quarter review:

All Ph.D. students will undergo a review of their performance in the program by the end of their sixth quarter. The review, conducted by the Graduate Program Committee in consultation with the faculty members whose areas of specialization most closely match those of the student, will be based on evaluation of a portfolio of writing compiled by the student in consultation with the faculty member(s) with whom the student has worked the most closely. The committee will make one of three recommendations: Proceed, Hold, or Terminate. Students receiving a recommendation of Hold may reapply once, within three quarters, to proceed in the program; those receiving a recommendation of Terminate who have not previously completed an M.A. in Religious Studies may continue enrolling for no more than three quarters to complete the requirements for the M.A. Plan I or the M.A. Plan II.

Written and oral qualifying examinations

Students must complete a round of qualifying written examinations, followed by an oral defense of those examinations, by the end of their third year and following the completion of all coursework. Students complete the three written examinations over a two- to three week period.

The topic and the content of each exam is determined by the student in consultation with the examination committee, and must be approved by that committee. After completing the written examinations, students undergo an oral examination by committee. The content of the oral examination is based on the written examination questions and answers.

Both the written and oral examination are composed, administered, and evaluated by a qualifying committee, nominated nine to twelve months before the exam by the student in consultation with the department faculty, and appointed by the graduate dean.

The oral qualifying exam can be taken in one of the following modes: in-person, remote, or hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination. Students taking the exam in-person are expected to be present on campus with all committee members physically present. If hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to be present on campus for the exam in a video enabled room that supports some committee members being physically present and others remote. For a remote exam, all committee members and the student are expected to be in attendance remotely online.

Upon successful completion of the written and oral qualifying examinations, the student is recommended to the graduate dean for advancement to candidacy; at this time, the student also nominates a dissertation committee.

Language requirement

Students must demonstrate reading proficiency in two languages other than English that are relevant to their interests in religious studies; the department must approve the choice of languages prior to completion of the language requirement. If a language is primarily used in spoken form, then spoken proficiency must be demonstrated instead of reading proficiency. If there is no clear choice of language for a student's interests (e.g. in the case of a student whose interests lie primarily with theoretical approaches stemming from Anglophone theorists), then the student should select French and German. This requirement can be fulfilled through a departmental examination of written and/or spoken proficiency, by passing a designated language course (e.g., FREN 009A, FREN 009B, GERM 002R), or by alternative certification (such as a diploma from a foreign language institute).

Dissertation and final defense

Following advancement to candidacy, and working closely with the dissertation committee, doctoral candidates must prepare a dissertation prospectus for approval by that committee. Once all committee members have communicated their approval of the prospectus and all other relevant approvals (e.g., Institutional Review Board) have been obtained, the candidate should begin the process of researching and writing the dissertation, which should be prepared and presented as prescribed by the Graduate Division. When the dissertation is complete and all members of the dissertation committee are satisfied with the written work, the candidate must schedule a dissertation defense. The final defense can be taken in one of the following modes: in-person, remote, or hybrid. The student and their advisor will discuss which mode best suits the subject matter, with the advisor making the final determination. Students taking the exam in-person are expected to be present on campus with all committee members physically present. If hybrid is chosen, the student is expected to be present on campus for the exam in a video enabled room that supports some committee members being physically present and others remote. For a remote exam, all committee members and the student are expected to be in attendance remotely online. This final, public oral examination consists of a 45-minute keynote-style presentation of the dissertation research, followed by questions from the committee and the public audience.

Normative Time to Degree 18 quarters.

Major

The Department of Theatre, Film, and Digital Production offers a B.A. in Theatre, Film, and Digital Production. The major focuses on three broad areas of theatre and film: literature, history, and criticism; performance, design, direction, and technology; and the elements of production. Students have the opportunity to write, perform, direct, and design. Four stages are available for rehearsals and performances: the 500-seat proscenium University Theatre, the 150-seat Studio Theatre in the Arts building with state-of-the-moment equipment for facilities, and the 120-seat Rehearsal Lab.

Students are able to practice acting in faculty-directed shows, student productions, and class presentations. Special projects and studies are offered for advanced students to produce an original work or to study in more depth acting, directing, scenic design, or playwriting.

As part of the Theatre, Film, and Digital Production Department's ongoing goal to provide a comprehensive and world-class program in the performing arts, a Filmmaking Track is offered for students who are primarily interested in pursuing the goal of becoming filmmakers. In addition to taking classes in filmmaking, screenwriting, acting, and technology, students will also take classes in literature and theory as requirements.

Student assistantships, work-study, Gluck Fellowships, and scholarships such as the Chancellor's Performance Award are available to students. For further information, call the Theatre, Film, and Digital Production Department, (951) 827-5568.

University Honors

Subject abbreviation: HNPGE Division of Undergraduate Education

Begona Echeverria, Ph.D.,
Howard H Hays, Jr. Endowed Chair and Associate Dean and Faculty Director of University Honors
381 Skye Hall
(951) 827-5323; honors@ucr.edu
honors.ucr.edu

Outstanding students from all majors can participate in University Honors. University Honors challenges students to take an active role in shaping their education through a variety of curricular, co-curricular, extra-curricular, and service-learning opportunities. Students benefit from University Honors staff support, in the areas of academic counseling, professional development, and guidance on applying for internships, fellowships, awards, and graduate or professional school. A study room and student lounge are available to University Honors students.

First-Year Experience

Admission to the first-year cohort in University Honors is based on high school grade point average and the successful completion of a University Honors admission application. During the first-year, students take required University Honors courses, participate in University Honors programs and events, and receive guidance from University Honors Ambassadors. First-year courses expose students to innovative teaching methods, interdisciplinary thinking, and increased depth of course content. One goal of University Honors courses is to expose students to methods of conceptualizing issues and framing questions that promote scholarship, engagement, and student success.

Second-Year Experience

The second-year cohort in University Honors is designed to expose students to the concept of civic engagement and to introduce them to the abundance of opportunities available to undergraduate students at UC Riverside. During the second-year, students engage in scholarly experiences that will allow them to interact with faculty members and begin considering topics for their eventual capstone projects.

The second-year cohort consists of continuing first-year University Honors students, as well as high-achieving UCR students who did not have the opportunity to participate in the first-year cohort. Admission to the second-year cohort is based on a specified UCR cumulative grade point average and the successful completion of a University Honors admission application.

Upper-Division Experience

The upper-division curriculum provides students with the framework to produce a capstone project, resulting from faculty-mentored, undergraduate research, creative activity, or experiential learning. This structure is adaptable to almost any major and allows each student the flexibility to work with a faculty-mentor to shape a research, creative activity, or experiential learning program to meet the ambitions of the project. University Honors provides resources to assist students with finding a faculty-mentor and guidance throughout the process of completing the capstone project. Continuing UCR students with an excellent academic record may apply to participate in University Honors. Students who transfer to UCR as juniors with excellent academic records may also apply to University Honors. During the junior year, students narrow their research, creative activity, or experiential learning focus, select a faculty-mentor, and prepare to undertake the capstone project. The program provides support in all phases of this planning. The capstone project is usually undertaken by the spring quarter of the junior year and is completed well before graduation. The completed capstone project is submitted to the student's faculty-mentor for approval. Completion of an approved capstone project, and satisfaction of all other University Honors requirements, will qualify a student for graduation with University Honors distinction, which is noted on the official transcript.

Committee in Charge

Rebecca Kugel (History)
Michelle Raheja (English)
Jason Weems (History of Art)
Daryle Williams, Dean, ex officio

The Western American Studies minor is intended to provide the student with a basic understanding of the history and institutional development of the Western United States — the Great Plains, the Southwest, and California — including the geographical and cultural factors that have shaped their history.

Requirements for the Western American Studies minor are 20 units distributed as follows:

1. HISA 137, HISA 138
2. One course from each of the following groups:
  - a) ETST 004/HIST 004, ETST 180/HISA 140, ETST 181/HISA 141, ETST 182/HISA 142, ETST 183/HISA 143
  - b) ANTH 115E, ANTH 140F, ETST 110M
  - c) ETST 108-I, ETST 108L, ETST 110K

History majors are not allowed to count HISA 137 or HISA 138 toward both their major and a minor in Western American Studies. If HISA 137 or HISA 138 is counted toward the major, then for the minor and additional course from (a) and an additional course from (b) are required.

See Minors under the College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences in the Colleges and Programs section of this catalog for additional information on minors.
